Dorothy Thompson Tells Senate Group 'It Can Happen Here.'

Minton, Schwellenbach Impugn Motives of Hughes, Roberts.

By Robert C. Albright.

The brisk, smartly-dressed wife of the man who wrote "It Can't Happen Here" yesterday told the Senate Judiciary Committee it is happening.

The witness was Miss Dorothy Thompson, writer wife of Sinclair Lewis and "a researcher into the mortality of republics." She had been ordered out of Hitlerized Germany.

In a crowded Senate caucus room she sat, and exchanged smart repartee with Senate seers. She grew tensely serious as she warned against the President' court plan and "the outstanding fact of our times"—the decline and fall of constitutional democracy.

Even while she was urging the need of "public confidence in the basic institutions of the country," two Democratic Senators Minton, of Indiana, and Schwellenbach, of Washington, arose in the Senate to assail two justices of the Supreme Court. And Attorney General Homer S. Cummings used the court's change of front on State wage legislation as an argument for the President's plan.

Mr. Cummings Regrets.

Cummings regretted that four out of the nine Justices have so strikingly demonstrated that they entertain a view of the Constitution which denies its adaptability to modern conditions.'

"Economic predilections do not yield to skilled draftsmanship, although sometimes they yield to the pressure of events," he said.

Miss Thompson, clad in a blue print dress, set off by black coat, blue fox collar and a small hat that failed to cover her graying hair, testified to a committee that applauded her alert parries and questioned her sparingly.

All available space in the hearing room was crowded with spectators, whose handclapping and laughter the committee's chairman, Henry Ashurst, declined to rap down, even when he was the target of Miss Thompson's wit.

Urges Legal Action.

"It is precisely because we live in a revolutionary age that it is most necessary for us to guard, with the greatest caution, the traditional procedures of Government," the witness asserted. "I believe that there is a constitutional crisis in this country. But I feel very strongly that the way to meet it is to meet it in law and not in personnel."

One by one she traced the social revolution in Germany, Italy and Russia, where she said attempts to meet private concentrations of economic power had resulted in totalitarian states.

"One must not push analogies too far," she said. "But neither can one divorce events in this country from ideas and tendencies which are manifest throughout the world."

All morning the committee had listened to Dr. Edwin Borchard, professor of constitutional law at Yale, whose testimony in some respects was similar.

"Let us not in fitful impatience," Dr. Borchard had said, "weaken a bulwark that has become a symbol throughout the world for the protection of the individual and of minorities against an all-powerful majority, whether led by the executive or by Congress."

Miss Thompson in stronger language warned against "a powerful majority running roughshod over the temporary minority and selling short the whole future of the country."

Laugh at Ashurst.

It was during cross-examination by Senator Edward R. Burke, of Nebraska, Democratic court plan opponent, that spectators were provoked to uncontrolled merriment at the expense of Chairman Ashurst.

"If a year ago any one would have suggested that Congress at this time might be considering recommendations from the President for six additions to the Supreme Court, would it not have been called fantastic?" asked Burke.

"Yes," said Miss Thompson. "I believe there were some suspicious souls who did suggest it, and I think

400,000 Miners Ready to Strike As Agreement Ends Tonight

By the Associated Press.

Spokesmen for the United Mine Workers of America and soft coal mine operators met in prolonged conferences yesterday in an eleventh-hour effort to reach a working agreement. Late last night the conferees recessed until 4 p. m. today.

The current contract expires at midnight, and union officials said 400,000 men would refrain from labor in the pits tomorrow unless a new one is signed or the present one extended.

While the unionists, headed by their president, John L. Lewis, dickered with the owners' representatives in New York, fresh disputes prompted WPA workers, clerks, hotel employes and truck drivers to leave their jobs.

A walkout of 1,200 truck drivers and helpers tied up more than 40 fuel companies in the Greater Boston area, throttled the fuel supply for 2,000,000 residents, halted land and water shipments of coal, coke and oil and threatened operations of power plants. The Coal and Fuel Chauffeurs and Helpers Union, affiliate of the American Federation of Labor, called the men out in support of demands for a 15 per cent wage increase. Representatives of employers and employes were summoned to a conciliation conference.

Gov. Frank Murphy, of Michigan, announced he would "press day and night" for solution of the strike at the Chrysler Motor Corporation, when Chairman Walter P. Chrysler and Lewis resume scheduled parleys at Lansing tomorrow.

At Flint, meanwhile, a strike forced suspension of service at the 300-room hotel Durant, where a State convention of the Daughters of the American Revolution was in session.

Four more shops shut their doors in a clerks' strike at Akron, Ohio.

Administration Drops Gigantic Tenant Aid Bill

House Group Virtually Abandons of Plan to Buy Land.

By Russell Smith.

Completing a Government retreat from a farm tenant aid program which President Roosevelt in the 1936 campaign termed essential to "long-time improvement of the welfare of the Nation," the House Agriculture Committee yesterday voted virtual abandonment of that program.

This action was taken within 24 hours after Chairman Jones (Democrat), Texas, and Senator Bankhead (Democrat), Alabama, coauthors of the bill, had conferred with the President, following which Mr. Roosevelt had told newspapermen any tenant program should be on a modest experimental basis.

In the wake of the 13-to-11 committee vote which struck out provisions for Federal purchase of land on which to give tenants a fresh start, advocates within the committee moved to obtain reconsideration, but most of them plainly were dubious as to prospects of overturning the verdict.

The committee's action was taken on Title I of the proposed act, which provided for appropriation of $50,000,000 a year to buy land for resale to tenants, who would repay the loan over a 45-year period.

Vote Set for Today.

Today the committee will vote upon remaining sections of the bill, providing a $75,000,000 appropriation for rehabilitation loans and $70,-

Society Matron Pays $75 Fine In Traffic Court

Mrs. Elizabeth Guggenheim Admits Leaving Scene of Accident.

By Howard F. Wentworth.

Flanked by an impressive array of legal talent—headed by William P. MacCracken, former Assistant Secretary of Commerce in charge of aviation—Mrs. Elizabeth E. Guggenheim, wealthy Washington society matron and nationally known horsewoman, yesterday pleaded guilty in Traffic Court to a charge of leaving the scene of an accident and was fined $75.

Other traffic developments of yesterday included a death which brought the year's toll to 37 and action of a coroner's jury holding a taxicab driver for the grand jury in connection with a collision between his cab and a fire truck which resulted in fatal injuries to a fire sergeant.

Dressed in a tweed sport suit and red hat, and wearing glasses, Mrs. Guggenheim sat in front of Judge John P. McMahon and nervously twisted a white handkerchief as McCracken opened her defense.

It was testified she struck the automobile of Carter Gibson, 4615 Morton street northwest, on upper Wisconsin avenue northwest, then backed her car away and continued toward Maryland. The accident, it was reported, occurred early on the morning of March 5.

$40 Damage Claimed.

Asked to testify in her own behalf, Mrs. Guggenheim told the court:

"I didn't think I had done any damage. I've had cars bump me

8 Tax Bills For District Given House

4 Measures Are Entirely New; 9th to Be Offered Today.

Collins Estimates They Will Return $12,000,000 to $15,000,000.

By James D. Secrest.

Eight local tax bills, four of them entirely new, were introduced in the House late yesterday by Chairman Collins of the sub-committee on appropriations, on the eve of what may prove a fierce battle between the District Legislative and Fiscal Committees in the House.

The eight tax measures, which will be supplemented by a ninth today, are estimated by Collins as capable of producing between $12,000,000 and $15,000,000 additional District revenue annually.

Almost half the anticipated revenue, or $6,149,119, will be needed to meet a deficit in the pending appropriations bill, while the remainder, if enacted into law, will serve to accumulate a reserve, part of which, Collins suggested, might be applied to a reduction in the real estate levy.

Four of the tax bills are merely revivals of the Mapes measures. They propose levies on incomes, inheritances and motor vehicles by weight, and a doubling of the 2-cent gasoline tax.

The four new bills impose additional taxes on all corporations operating in the District, motion picture and vaudeville-movie theaters, parking lots and insurance companies.

Meanwhile, Chairman Mary T. Norton and other members of the House District Committee threatened to raise points of order against at least two of the proposed interdepartmental transfers ordered in the bill.

A special meeting of the committee was called for this morning to decide upon a course of action with relation to the legislative riders transferring Gallinger Hospital and the District Tuberculosis Sanatoriam from the welfare to the health department, and 20 playgrounds from jurisdiction of the playground department to the community center department.

May Wreck Supply Bill.

Representative Collins last night accepted an invitation from Chairman Norton to appear before her committee today and explain the proposals.

While such points of order would be certain to be sustained, they may wreck the District supply bill, as the riders are so connected with the appropriations for the health and community center department that if they are deleted the funds for personal services also will be eliminated.

Chairman Collins last night was preparing a lengthy defense of the District bill and stated that he would "hit the floor fighting" today as general debate opens. The measure is scheduled to be passed tomorrow.

The basis of the fight between the committees is the contention of the legislative group that such departmental reorganizations as provided in the supply bill should be left to its consideration. Members of the appropriations sub-committee argue, however, that legislative riders on money bills are commonplace.

Sharp Words Certain.

If the committee rivalry reaches the floor, sharp words are certain to develop and the friction may well lead to a prejudice in the legislative committee against the new tax measures.

Provisions of the four new tax bills, drafted with the advice of George Lord, Detroit tax expert, who aided the Mapes committee, are as follows:

Corporations: Every domestic corporation operating for profit or foreign corporation seeking to do business in the District must pay, first, an "organization fee" of one mill for each $1 of authorized capital stock and a proportionate fee for all increases in stock voted thereafter. Foreign corporations are taxed only in proportion to property used in the District.

In addition, corporations are required to pay an annual fee of 2 mills on each $1 of paid-up capital and surplus, but this fee cannot be less than $50 nor more than $20,000. The same proportional levy would be imposed on foreign corporations.

"Surplus" is defined in the bill as meaning the net value of corporation's property, less outstanding indebtedness and paid-up capital. No deduction may be made because of impairment of capital, but exclusions are allowable for all property used solely in interstate commerce.

Former Husband of Young Artists' Model Is Released.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 1 (Thursday) (AP).—Gay Ronnie Gedeon's eccentric father told again and again early today how he found the pretty model's battered body in her East Fiftieth street apartment as police relentlessly hammered hour after hour at his alibi for the Saturday night before Easter.

The New York Times quoted "a high police official" that "Gedeon will be arrested on a formal charge" today and that "under no circumstances will he be released."

There was no inkling of what the "formal charge" police might be considering against Gedeon, who reported to police headquarters last Sunday afternoon that he had found his daughter, his wife, Mary, and Frank Byrnes, a roomer, slain in his estranged wife's apartment. The Times said a pistol had been found hidden in Gedeon's upholstery shop.

Attack Gedeon's Alibi.

Gedeon, once questioned and released, was brought back to headquarters yesterday when officers turned their fire on his alibi that he was playing at skee-ball until 3 a. m. Easter morning. Medical Examiner Gonzales has determined that Byrnes and Mrs. Gedeon were killed at around 11 p. m. and lovely Ronnie shortly after 3 a. m., when she returned from a party.

The "high official" quoted by the Times, said a motive had been established and that there was a definite suspect in the case. Neither the motive nor the suspect's name was divulged.

The "high official" also was quoted as saying the case would be solved within 24 hours, "probably by the confession of the suspect."

The shadowy figure of a "definite suspect" took shape last night as District Attorney William C. Dodge predicted an early arrest in the triple murder mystery of Beekman Hill.

Have Definite Suspect.

The sandy-haired prosecutor, taking personal charge of the investigation, said:

"I can state positively that we have a definite suspect."

It was the most optimistic note sounded since the nude body of the glamorous 20-year-old model was found in a bedroom of her apartment on Easter. Nearby lay the bodies of her mother and a roomer, Frank Byrnes, 35. The women had been beaten and strangled, the roomer stabbed to death.

The prosecutor spoke after he had spent hours questioning three men in the East Fifty-first street police station. In addition to Gedeon they were:

Robert Flower, concessionaire of a "hot dog" stand whose marriage to the girl victim five years ago was annulled because she was under age, and Georges (Frenchy) Gueret, short, stocky unemployed chauffeur who formerly boarded with Mrs. Gedeon.

Two Men Released.

Gueret and Flower left the police station during the afternoon, leaving only Gedeon closeted with Dodge and police officers.

Before resuming his interrogations, Dodge said:

"Things look very promising and I am certain the case will be cleared up."

His exuberance was not shared by some of the other investigators.

Detective Captain William T. Reynolds, informed of the prosecutor's statement, shrugged his shoulders dubiously.

"Well, I couldn't say that myself," he said. "We're just digging and digging, looking for something and hoping for the best."

While the questioning of Gedeon continued, hour after hour, detectives went over to Brooklyn and returned with Patsy De Demic, a lunch wagon operator.

De Demic had a few scratches on his face. With a puzzled expression he explained he had been in a fight with his brother-in-law.

Husband Questioned.

Gedeon, a slightly built upholsterer who left his wife several years ago as a result of differences of opinion as to how strictly their lovely daughter should be reared, looked haggard and worn when he entered the police station shortly before noon.

He had spent the night at a combined bowling alley and barroom

Love for Parents Caused Marriage, Child Bride Says

Bradenton, Fla., March 31 (AP).—The lure of a promised bicycle and pretty clothing and the desire to provide a home for her parents led 12-year-old Martha Nell Revell into marriage with a 57-year-old neighbor, it was claimed today in annulment proceedings in circuit court.

The sixth grade pupil charged Chandler L. Revell, a grandfather and the foreman of a crate mill, also threatened to have her father discharged from work at the mill unless she agreed to marry him.

An attorney retained by Mrs. Ruby Hendrick, of Jacksonville, sister of the child, filed the complaint. The elderly suitor promised, the attorney said, to live with Martha Nell "as a second father," and agreed not to consummate the marriage.

Franco Fights Morocco Revolt

Spanish Rebels Pin Last Hope For Victory Upon Mussolini

Franco Strikes Without Mercy to Put Down Revolt in His Ranks as Loyalists Gain on Many Fronts.

Copyright, 1937, by the United Press.

The Spanish rebel generalissimo, striking without mercy to put down revolt within his ranks, met with crushing defeats on almost every front as the loyalists—quick to seize their opportunity—fought with new fury.

Hundreds of insurgent dead littered the Cordoba front as rebel forces fled before the victorious Loyalists, and Burgos, original seat of Franco's Fascist junta, was imperiled by another government drive.

Dispatches reaching Gibraltar tonight—rebel, loyalist and neutral—indicated to military experts that unless Mussolini sends thousands of additional Italian troops into Spain the rebel cause will be lost.

Franco will lose his chance to be dictator of Spain and the ambition of Germany and Italy to set up a puppet Fascist regime at the "backdoor" of the Mediterranean bulwark so vital to democratic France and England will be shattered.

Depends on Il Duce.

"Everything depends on Il Duce now," a neutral military tactician said.

At Algeciras, rebel naval base across the Bay of Gibraltar and a "hotbed" of the rebel revolt, Franco ordered a shake-up of the entire headquarters staff.

High officers were stripped of their commands and sent to various fighting fronts.

Franco was reported to have arrived at Seuta by airplane to investigate the causes of the mutiny.

Arabs arriving at Casablanca, French Morocco, said 100 soldiers were executed at Ceuta after a court-martial.

The "clean-up" of the conspirators continued on both sides of the Straits of Gibraltar, with the crack of firing-squad rifles reported from Malaga and La Linea.

Conspirators arrested at La Linea included a high-ranking Spanish intelligence officer and a former judge. The military commandant of La Linea, deposed four days ago, was among those seized.

Ten insurgent aviators deserted with their planes at Tetuan (Spanish Morocco) Monday and flew to Valencia to join the Loyalists.

Discusses Varied Topics With Lord Tweedsmuir During Ride.

Motoring back from Mount Vernon in the warm glow of a setting sun, President Roosevelt and His Excellency Lord Tweedsmuir, Governor of Canada, late yesterday began important conversations that were to cover a wide variety of subjects affecting relations between the two countries.

President Roosevelt had said his talk with the Canadian Governor General would embrace every possible matter of common interest. While the proposed St. Lawrence waterway treaty has been given a prominent part in advance speculation over the discussions, it was expected to play a lesser part than the tense situation abroad. Officially a representative of the British King, Lord Tweedsmuir is in close touch with affairs overseas.

At a press conference yesterday morning, at which Lord Tweedsmuir talked informally with newspapermen at the White House, President Roosevelt laughingly explained that while the Governor General was not in position to discuss government affairs officially, he and the President could sit on a sofa together and overhear each other soliloquize on many subjects.

Yesterday's drive back from Mount Vernon was the first opportunity the two had had, since Lord and Lady Tweedsmuir's arrival on Tuesday, to discuss affairs of official interest. The Governor General had had a busy day visiting Fort Myer, Arlington Cemetery and Bullitt, Davies Believed Suggesting Conference to Avert War.

Americas' Policy Held as Example

Threats, Counterthreats of Foreign Leaders Presage Conflict.

By William V. Nessly.

Europe's plunge toward war, quickened almost daily by swiftly mounting friction, last night found President Roosevelt apparently exerting quiet efforts to promote peace.

In numerous capitals, it was understood, the President's representatives were urging upon leaders of European states an international conference that might remove or neutralize the causes of economic and political antagonisms that so far have gone largely unchecked.

Here, the President was in earnest conversation with his excellency, Lord Tweedsmuir, governor general of Canada, and there was little doubt that the critical situation in Europe, centering about the Spanish civil war but fanned by long-held animosities and rivalries, was among the subjects being discussed.

Davis In London.

In London, Norman Davis, Ambassador-at-Large, was preaching to political leaders the urgent necessity for a conference. The British press emphasized the significance of Davis' arrival yesterday in connection with larger questions of world peace and economic co-operation, and the Associated Press from London quoted a member of his suite as saying some of the newspapers' conjectures were "not far fetched."

Ambassador Bullitt, following his recent trip to Warm Springs, Ga., with the President, sailed yesterday for Paris, where it was understood he would stress to French officials the President's belief that such a conference holds promise of averting the feared catastrophe.

In Moscow, likewise, Ambassador Joseph E. Davies was reported seeking to extend the President's conviction and lay the groundwork for a general discussion. Similar efforts were believed being made in Rome and Berlin.

"Good Neighbor" Plea.

The envoys of the President were said to be holding up to Europe the example of the 21 American nations, set at the All-American Peace Conference at Buenos Aires last December, and the resulting conventions, hailed as wiping out numerous irritations and adopting the "good neighbor" policy for the entire hemisphere.

Meanwhile Europe's plight became more bitter, as Gen. Francisco Franco's rebellion in Spain appeared near a crack-up from internal revolt and military and diplomatic opposition, according to a summary carried by the United Press in a copyrighted dispatch from London.

It said European statesmen foresaw grave possibilities from the crowded events of the day, which included:

1. Davis' arrival in London to confer with British statesmen on what well-informed observers believed might lead to another Washington conference on world problems.

2—Franco's iron-fisted efforts to quell uprisings among his troops, supposedly precipitated by Spanish hatreds toward Italian rebel "volunteers" whom they believe are attempting to set up a "puppet" Fascist state in Spain.

3—Increased Italo-British tension and grave apprehensions in anti-Fascist countries lest Mussolini—harrassed by crushing rebel defeats on the Pozoblanco and Guadalajara fronts and their blow to his prestige—drive Europe to the brink of war by leaping openly into the Spanish war.

Naval Reprisal Threat.

4—France's sharp warning to Franco to stop interfering with French shipping on the high seas, under threat of naval reprisal—a warning almost identical to one sent by Great Britain to the rebel generalissimo 24 hours ago.

5—Reports that, despite the warlike British and French warnings, a British steamer and a French freighter were halted yesterday by rebel warships. The French ship, Cape Falcon, was fired upon in the Bay of Biscay and the British steamer, Thorpe Hall, was halted by

Doctors Hear Artificial Fever Cures Gonorrhea in Single Day

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Artificial fever was presented as a new medical "specific," a definite cure in one special disease—in this case gonorrhea—by 25 physicians today at the first international conference on fever therapy.

"Cure" was the word repeatedly used by several physicians. They said that not every case is cured. But they reported "cures" ranging from 70 to 90 per cent of cases treated.

The greatest boon, they agreed, is reduction in time, from the two to six months treatment required by previous methods. Many cases have been "cured" by fever in one day.

One 10-hour "session of fever of 106.3 degrees," said Drs. Arthur Elmer Belt and Alvin William Folkenberg, of Los Angeles, was tried on 64 cases. All but 5 were cured.

The other 59 "have been found," the report said, "consistently free from organisms following the 10-hour session." Forty of the cases were acute, that is, in early stage, in which cures are often easiest. The other 24 were chronic. The single fever treatment, the Los Angeles doctors declared, worked essentially equally well in both types.

The "striking rapidity of the cure" was reported by Drs. J. Janet of Paris and M. R. Dreyfus of the Hospital Necker, Paris.

Failures were attributed to three causes. One, newness of the treatment. Two, occasional strains of germs able to stand more heat than

Glass King May Sell Van Sweringen Empire And Devote $10,000,000 Profit to Charity

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—A source close to George A. Ball, Muncie, Ind., industrialist, who aided the late Van Sweringen brothers, of Cleveland, to keep control of their vast railroad system, said today he planned eventually to sell his almost exclusive equity in the enterprise and devote the estimated $10,000,000 profits to charity.

While Ball could not be reached immediately, his secretary, Miss Gertrude Barrett, said Ball was "not seeking a purchaser" and had "no immediate intention of selling his control" in the Van Sweringen set-up.

At Washington, Chairman Wheeler of the Senate Railway Finance Committee said there should be a thorough investigation of reports of a pending shift in control in the transportation system and added if approval of the Interstate Commerce Commission was not secured upon any transfer his committee would "investigate every angle of the transaction."

G. A. Tomlinson, Great Lakes shipping operator, who was associated with Ball in acquiring control of the Van Sweringen properties, said last night in Cleveland that "propositions" had been made concerning sale of the enterprise, but that "nothing of interest" had resulted so far. He said he thought if would-be purchasers met Ball's views he would sell.

The 75-year-old Midwestern capitalist, who built a fortune in the glass jar industry, is understood to have had four or five groups interested in acquiring his holdings in Midamerica Corporation. While a sale has not yet been made, consummation is expected shortly.

Midamerica was formed by Ball and Tomlinson for the purpose of buying at auction in 1935 collateral underlying the $3,000,000,000 Van Sweringen system.

Following a loan default of $48,000,000 in May, 1935, a New York banking group, headed by J. P. Morgan & Co., offered the collateral at open auction. Midamerica bid it in for $3,121,000 in September, 1935.

O. P. Van Sweringen died in November, 1936. His brother, Mantis J., died in December, 1935.

Ball acquired almost exclusive control of Midamerica by purchasing most of Tomlinson's holdings.

It is said control of the Van Sweringen Railway network will remain in Clevelatnd. Final arrangements for both sale of Ball's interest and for his application of

Court Prevents End of Sit-Ins, Wagner Claims

By Sidney Olson.

Sit-down strikes came about as an inevitable answering "protest against repeated violations of industrial liberties" by a "few great vested interests," and can be stopped by halting court interference with enforcement of the National Labor Relations act, Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, told a closely-listening Senate yesterday.

Wagner, the author of the act, which provides mediation machinery for the peaceful settlement of industrial disputes, fate of which remains to be determined by the Supreme Court, said:

"The sit-down, even in the few cases where labor has used it effectively, has succeeded in winning for labor only such industrial liberties as both law and morals have long sanctioned.".

Assails Corporations.

"The sit-down has been provoked by the long-standing ruthless tactics of a few great corporations who have hamstrung the National Labor Relations Board by invoking injunctions in the courts, which they have a perfect legal right to do; who have openly banded together to defy this law of Congress quite independently of any court action, which they have neither the legal nor the moral right to do; and who have systematically used spies and discharges and violence and terrorism to shatter the workers' liberties as defined by this Congress, which they have neither the legal nor the moral right to do.

"The organized and calculated and cold-blooded sit-down against Federal law has come, as always, not from the common people, but from a few great vested interests."

Thus placing the responsibility for the present wide-spread industrial warfare squarely on the shoulders of industries who have contested the constitutionality of the Labor Relations act, Wagner shifted his attack to show that workers are not sharing in the new "prosperity."

Cites Auto Industry.

Using the automobile industry for his statistics, he said:

"Everyone is aware that the past year smashed all records in the automobile industry. The annual yield on invested capital reached the incredible figure of 26 per cent, shooting far beyond the 1929 mark.

"Profits rose from $199,000,000 in 1935 to $301,000,000 in 1936, a gain of 51 per cent. So far as the ownership was concerned, 1936 in the automobile industry makes 1929 look sick.

"But if we look at the individual worker's side of the picture, we find that his full-time wage was 12 per cent lower in 1936 than in 1929. Twelve dollars subtracted from every $100 that he had earned in the old prosperity era was his tax contribution toward 'the new prosperity' of the industry. And for good measure, he is working four hours a week longer than he did in the days of NRA.

"Do these figures indicate the imminence of a labor monopoly?"

Dies Asks Red Inquiry.

Meanwhile Representative Martin Dies (Democrat), Texas, argued before the House Rules Committee for a Congressional investigation of sit-down strikes on the grounds that "Communists have stirred up this situation." Dies also asserted reliable sources had told him Chicago and New York gangsters were figuring prominently in the strikes.

At the White House, Sidney Hillman, head of the textile workers' organizing committee, now campaigning to unionize the textile industry for the Committee for Industrial Organization, told President Roosevelt he was "very hopeful that co-operation between employers and employes would avoid textile strikes.

"I am not speaking for sit-down strikes," he told reporters, "but any violations of law that may have occurred recently were minor compared to the violations of Federal law by industry.

"Managements have flouted the law repeatedly."

Hits Pleas for U. S. Aid.

Wagner was bitter in his treatment of recent pleas by industries and trade associations for Government interference in the strikes, indirectly referring to the Supreme Court's decision in the Carter case that strikes are "purely local" matters in which the Government is helpless to intervene. He said:

"Nothing in the current situation has impressed me more than the recent statement of the National Association of Manufactuers, setting forth a plan for Federal intervention in labor disputes.

"I recall the vehement protestations of this organization when the Labor Relations act was before Congress, on the ground that all dealings between employers and workers in manufacturing were of purely local concern.

"If they and others were right when they claimed that the national labor relations act was unconstitutional in toto, then the Federal Government has no jurisdiction to do anythink whatsoever about strife in manufacturing industry."

"If they and others are right when they clamor for Federal action in situations analogous to the General Motors or Chrysler trouble, then they and the 53 Liberty League lawyers who pronounced the national labor relations act unconstitutional in toto were wrong."

Holding that "widespread conflict between industry and labor cannot be handled on the same plane as a dance-hall brawl," Wagner stressed again and again that the only obstacle to removing "the underlying causes" of industrial discontent was court interference with the enforcement of the act.

He cited in particular detail the Chrysler and General Motors strikes to show that the two great corporations could not "expect help in hours of danger from the law when in hours of safety they had joined with others in paralyzing the effectiveness of the law through court action."

Senator Glass' Court Plan Denunciation Recalls 'New Economic Era' of 1928 and 1929.

By Franklyn Waltman

AS I listened Monday night to the scathing denunciation of President Roosevelt's Supreme Court plan which fell from the lips of Senator Carter Glass, my mind went back to the years before the depression, to those quiet, peaceful years under Coolidge and Hoover — the years of the New Economic Era.

WALTMAN.

I recalled several scenes in the Senate Chamber during 1928 and early 1929. Standing at his desk on those occasions was Senator Glass, younger than now but no more vigorous, sharply denouncing the wave of stock market speculation which was sweeping the country, gripping in its wake charwomen and shoeshine boys. "Gambling" was what Senator Glass called it.

Indignantly and angrily he demanded that the Federal Reserve authorities take steps to prevent the use of bank credit for this "gambling;" he called on the country to arouse itself, that it was living in a fool's paradise; he urged Congress to pass legislation to tax speculative security sales. Along with others, notably Senator Robert M. La Follette, he cried out in alarm against that situation and warned the country to take heed of the future.

I recalled a callous Senate which indifferently heard the Virginian's words, some hiding sneers behind their hands. Privately they said that "old man Glass was good in his day, but he was getting old—he does not understand that times have changed—that we have a new Economic Era."

I remembered a book written by one who taught in a great university and professed to be a preeminent finacial analyst. Published in June, 1929—virtually on the eve of the world's worst economic catastrophe—this book termed Senator Glass "naive" and as one of a group of "flannel-throated fanatics."

"When the Senator from the Old Dominion rose in that chamber of absurdities, sometimes referred to as a deliberative assembly," asserted this author, "his remarks were characterized by neither reason nor restraint. Blatant bigotry and turbulent provincialism have joined to condemn an innocent community."

And these incidents, which now seem to have occurred so long ago, came back to my mind on Tuesday night when I heard Senator Joe Robinson assert that "Mr. Glass has become so alarmed and emotional over this issue that he can find nothing but contempt and bitterness for those who dare question the sanctity and infallibility of the Supreme Court."

Senator Robinson indicated that the fears which have generated in Carter Glass' heart, the outraged indignation which he expressed Monday night over the danger of the President's plan are without foundation and existed only in his imagination—just as Carter Glass' prophecies of eight and nine years ago were characterized.

Well, the catastrophe against which Senator Glass warned in 1928 and 1929 came to pass and with fearful and agonizing suffering for all the Nation. I wonder whether things might have been different had the country in February, 1928, when Senator Glass first became vigorously outspoken against stock-market "gambling," listened and taken heed and had the Government taken appropriate action to stop the speculative movement just getting up speed.

And I wonder now whether Senator Glass is not as right as he was before the depression and that the Nation will run afoul of serious danger to its civil liberties and even its economic life if we continue down the President's road. Certainly, Carter Glass has to his credit the honor of having been a good prophet on a former crucial occasion.

I cannot remember Senator Robinson shouting any warnings then or helping Senator Glass and the little band which fought with him against stock-market speculation to work out some method for avoiding the coming catastrophe. Perhaps Senator Robinson did, but I cannot remember it, and whenever the Arkansan does something his volume of voice is such that it is usually remembered.

Incidentally, back in those years of the late twenties those of us in the Senate press gallery, who were quite young, were accustomed to regard Senator Glass as a liberal, as one of the men who had shed glory on the Wilson Administration and as a doughty fighter against privilege and greed. We thought of Senator Robinson as too conservative to lead the Democratic Party in the Senate—as a lawyer with former public utility clients.

But that shows how wrong we were—for by present-day standards Carter Glass has become the conservative and Joe Robinson the flaming liberal.

Musing further over Senator Robinson's speech, just what is it he wants? He thinks the Supreme Court should be packed when it invalidates New Deal legislation and he thinks it should be packed when it upholds New Deal legislation. You just cannot satisfy some people.

Oh, well, why worry about it? It is doubtful whether Joe Robinson takes himself nearly as seriously as many other folks do. Perhaps his remarks are best characterized by the music which the studio pianist played after he finished speaking. It was: "I'm forever blowing bubbles."

Governor Explains Ky. Court System

New Orleans, March 31 (AP).—Gov. A. B. Chandler, the young chief executive of Kentucky, explained his plan here today of guaranteeing constitutionality of Administration acts before the Kentucky Supreme Court.

"Before I present a bill to the Legislature," he said, "I go to the members of the Supreme Court and say to them, 'Now look here. I want to do this. Is it constitutional? If it isn't, then how can I make it constitutional?'

"That's the trouble with the United States Supreme Court today," he added. "They allow the Congress to go ahead and make arrangements to spend millions of dollars, set up various branches of government to spend the money, actually spend it and then about a year later say, 'No, you can't spend the money and you can't regulate this or that.'"

Boy Scout Leader Admits He Framed Story of Kidnaping

El paso, Tex., March 31 (AP).—Sheriff Chris Fox said Robert Miller, Boy Scout executive, admitted between sobs today that he "framed" a story of being kidnaped by desert desperadoes to explain his disappearance a week ago.

The 23-year-old Safford, Ariz., Scout leader brought a sudden end to the Southwest's biggest manhunt this morning when he appeared at a natural gas station north of here and told of being abducted last Wednesday by two strangers he had stopped to aid while driving from Safford to Globe.

Sheriff Fox said Miller would be allowed to return home.

Miller told the sheriff he had "framed" the kidnap tale so he could return to his home without embarrassment. He had been in ill health and his need for a rest, he said, had caused him to decide to go away for a spell. He blamed his physical condition on overwork.

World Powers On Eve of Race For Ships, Guns

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—April Fool's Day—tomorrow—clears the decks for what may be a race among world naval powers in bigger guns and probably bigger battleships.

Expiring at midnight is the time allotted for the five biggest navies to pledge themselves to maximum guns of 14 inches in future building.

Just as restrictions on the total size of navies lapsed January 1 with the expiration of the Washington and London treaties of 1922 and 1930, so now the last possible check on the size of warships is abandoned.

"If there is real competition in guns, bigger ships will be required," Rear Admiral William Woodward Phelps, former Navy General Board member and past commandant at the Brooklyn and Portsmouth, N. H., yards, said today in commenting on the failure of the gun pact.

Japan Refused Limitation.

A year ago the United States, Britain and France agreed to a 14-inch limit if Japan and Italy would adhere. Only Japan has refused. Only the United States has ratified an alternative agreement for a 16-inch limit, but Britain and France could yet join under terms of the 1936 tri-power treaty which their delegates signed.

Failure of Japan to accept the 14-inch limit, has rendered a dispute as to whether it is better to mount nine 16-inch guns instead of twelve 14-inch weapons on this country's two new battleships, the bids for one of which were to be issued today.

"But we may have a harder hitter and more accurate weapon in our 14-inch modern gun than the old 16-inch gun," said Admiral Phelps. "In the battle of Juland in the World War, the Germans, with 11-inch guns, overwhelmed Lord Beatty (the British admiral), who had 13-inch guns. It was a question of fire control and accuracy."

Endurance Is Stressed.

Noting that American authorities are divided in opinion over whether bigger, longer range and slower firing guns are better than lighter, faster action and possibly more accurate short range weapons, the admiral stressed the importance of "endurance in battle."

Unless bigger ships are built, he pointed out, weight and space limitations will give smaller guns an advantage in endurance because more shells can be carried. The 16-inch gun requires shells of slightly more than a ton in weight while shells of about 1,300 pounds are used by 14-inch guns.

"The width limits of the Panama Canal locks (each 110 feet) present another problem which might handicap the United States, alone of all nations, if bigger, battleships are built."

The largest present-day warships have only a few inches to spare in negotiating the canal.

Discussed 18-Inch Guns.

"However, I believe we'll find a way to lengthen our ships without making them wider in order to get on big guns, if necessary," he said. "In fact, we have already talked of 18-inch guns."

At present there are only seven battleships in the world carrying 18-inch guns (60 feet long). Only two, Britain's Nelson and Rodney, carry nine each. The United States has three vessels, the Colorado, Maryland and West Virginia, and Japan two, the Nagalo and Mutsu, with eight each.

"If our 1916 building program had not been ruined by the Washington treaty we would have had ten battleships and six battle cruisers with 16-inch guns," said Admiral Phelps.

France and Italy, which have entered the field of 35,000-ton battleships, have two each mounting 15-inch guns, and Britain has five more battleships and three cruisers with guns that size. Two new battleships laid down January 1 by Britain will have 14-inch guns, but two more are expected to be started this year with the 16-inch size.

Coal Bill Debated.

By the Associated Press.

Senators debated a stack of proposed amendments to the Guffey-Vinson coal bill yesterday, all the while voicing conflicting predictions about the measure's fate in the Supreme Court.

Constitutionality of portions of the bill became the principal issue after Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, urged regulation of the soft coal industry as a protection against wasteful mining practices and "unfair competition" among producers.

Guffey and Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, cited Supreme Court decisions to support their contention that the bill would be held constitutional. It has passed the House.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, suggested that some sections might be invalidated.

The Senate accepted an amendment by Senator Robinson (Democrat), of Arkansas, which would require producers to pay 1 cent per ton toward expenses of the proposed coal commission instead of one-half of 1 per cent of all sales.

A committee amendment was adopted exempting statistical bureaus of the commission from service, and Senator White (Republican), of Maine, protested "some time a halt will have called if we are going to hav civil service left."

Court Prevents End of Sit-Ins, Wagner Claims

By Sidney Olson.

Sit-down strikes came about as an inevitable answering "protest against repeated violations of industrial liberties" by a "few great vested interests," and can be stopped by halting court interference with enforcement of the National Labor Relations act, Senator Robert F. Wagner (Democrat), New York, told a closely-listening Senate yesterday.

Wagner, the author of the act, which provides mediation machinery for the peaceful settlement of industrial disputes, fate of which remains to be determined by the Supreme Court, said:

"The sit-down, even in the few cases where labor has used it effectively, has succeeded in winning for labor only such industrial liberties as both law and morals have long sanctioned."

Assails Corporations.

"The sit-down has been provoked by the long-standing ruthless tactics of a few great corporations who have hamstrung the National Labor Relations Board by invoking injunctions in the courts, which they have a perfect legal right to do; who have openly banded together to defy this law of Congress quite independently of any court action, which they have neither the legal nor the moral right to do; and who have systematically used spies and discharges and violence and terrorism to shatter the workers' liberties as defined by this Congress, which they have neither the legal nor the moral right to do.

"The organized and calculated and cold-blooded sit-down against Federal law has come, as always, not from the common people, but from a few great vested interests."

Thus placing the responsibility for the present wide-spread industrial warfare squarely on the shoulders of industries who have contested the constitutionality of the Labor Relations act, Wagner shifted his attack to show that workers are not sharing in the new "prosperity."

Cites Auto Industry.

Using the automobile industry for his statistics, he said:

"Everyone is aware that the past year smashed all records in the automobile industry. The annual yield on invested capital reached the incredible figure of 26 per cent, shooting far beyond the 1929 mark.

"Profits rose from $199,000,000 in 1935 to $301,000,000 in 1936, a gain of 51 per cent. So far as the ownership was concerned, 1936 in the automobile industry makes 1929 look sick.

"But if we look at the individual worker's side of the picture, we find that his full-time wage was 12 per cent lower in 1936 than in 1929. Twelve dollars subtracted from every $100 that he had earned in the old prosperity era was his tax contribution toward 'the new prosperity' of the industry. And for good measure, he is working four hours a week longer than he did in the days of NRA.

"Do these figures indicate the imminence of a labor monopoly?"

Dies Asks Red Inquiry.

Meanwhile Representative Martin Dies (Democrat), Texas, argued before the House Rules Committee for a Congressional investigation of sit-down strikes on the grounds that "Communists have stirred up this situation." Dies also asserted reliable sources had told him Chicago and New York gangsters were figuring prominently in the strikes.

At the White House, Sidney Hillman, head of the textile workers' organizing committee, now campaigning to unionize the textile industry for the Committee for Industrial Organization, told President Roosevelt he was "very hopeful that co-operation between employers and employes would avoid textile strikes.

"I am not speaking for sit-down strikes," he told reporters, "but any violations of law that may have occurred recently were minor compared to the violations of Federal law by industry.

"Managements have flouted the law repeatedly."

Hits Pleas for U. S. Aid.

Wagner was bitter in his treatment of recent pleas by industries and trade associations for Government interference in the strikes, indirectly referring to the Supreme Court's decision in the Carter case that strikes are "purely local" matters in which the Government is helpless to intervene. He said:

"Nothing in the current situation has impressed me more than the recent statement of the National Association of Manufactuers, setting forth a plan for Federal intervention in labor disputes.

"I recall the vehement protestations of this organization when the Labor Relations act was before Congress, on the ground that all dealings between employers and workers in manufacturing were of purely local concern.

"If they and others were right when they claimed that the national labor relations act was unconstitutional in toto, then the Federal Government has no jurisdiction to do anythink whatsoever about strife in manufacturing industry."

"If they and others are right when they clamor for Federal action in situations analogous to the General Motors or Chrysler trouble, then they and the 53 Liberty League lawyers who pronounced the national labor relations act unconstitutional in toto were wrong."

Holding that "widespread conflict between industry and labor cannot be handled on the same plane as a dance-hall brawl," Wagner stressed again and again that the only obstacle to removing "the underlying causes" of industrial discontent was court interference with the enforcement of the act.

He cited in particular detail the Chrysler and General Motors strikes to show that the two great corporations could not "expect help in hours of danger from the law when in hours of safety they had joined with others in paralyzing the effectiveness of the law through court action."

Coal Bill Debated.

By the Associated Press.

Senators debated a stack of proposed amendments to the Guffey-Vinson coal bill yesterday, all the while voicing conflicting predictions about the measure's fate in the Supreme Court.

Constitutionality of portions of the bill became the principal issue after Senator Guffey (Democrat), of Pennsylvania, urged regulation of the soft coal industry as a protection against wasteful mining practices and "unfair competition" among producers.

Guffey and Senator Neely (Democrat), of West Virginia, cited Supreme Court decisions to support their contention that the bill would be held constitutional. It has passed the House.

Senator Borah (Republican), of Idaho, and Senator Tydings (Democrat), of Maryland, suggested that some sections might be invalidated.

The Senate accepted an amendment by Senator Robinson (Democrat), of Arkansas, which would require producers to pay 1 cent per ton toward expenses of the proposed coal commission instead of one-half of 1 per cent of all sales.

A committee amendment was adopted exempting statistical bureaus of the commission from civil service, and Senator White (Republican), of Maine, protested that "some time a halt will have to be called if we are going to have any civil service left."

Read Described Two Murders, Cellmate Says

Planned Escape, Prisoner Testifies in Dollman Slaying Trial.

By the Associated Press.

Sutton, W. Va., March 31.—The State closed its case against 25-year-old William B. Read today with the testimony of a former cellmate that Read had confided two killings—one in West Virginia, another in Maryland.

The young resident of Four Corners, Md., is accused of killing W. Arle Dollman, 34-year-old Charleston salesman, near Gassaway last Thanksgiving.

Alvin Parker, the State's last witness, told the jury he was in jail with Read after his arrest last December in Ruston, La. He said Read had asked him to tell West Virginia officers that he (Parker) also was implicated in the Dollman killing.

Parker added:

"Read said then the officers would take me back with him and we could wreck the car on the way and escape."

The defendant went on the stand a few moments later to deny he knew anything about the death of Dollman, whose body was discovered in his burning automobile. Read reiterated he was in Richmond, Va., at the time of the killing.

Parker's testimony that Read told him about the West Virginia and Maryland slayings came after War Joseph Kirby and Lawrence Gingell had named Read as the actual slayer of Dollman.

They said Read then set fire to the salesman's automobile to "destroy any fingerprints."

Both Gingell and Kirby are awaiting trial on the same charge. Maryland also has indicted the trio on a charge of slaying Elwood Mathews, Silver Spring farmer.

Read conferred with his attorney, E. G. Pierson, after the State rested today, then returned to the courtroom to give a detailed account of what he said were his movements in Richmond between November 24 and November 27.

"I went to a picture show on the afternoon of November 25 with Gingell," the defendant replied to questioning. "That night I took a girl to see another show."

It was on that night that Gingell and Kirby testified they, with Read, ran out of gasoline below Gassaway. Gingell said he stopped a car and the driver—Dollman—offered to take them to a filling station. Gingell, 20-year-old former Kensington (Md.) caddy, testified that en route Read and Dollman quarreled over the salesman's driving.

Gingell told the jury Dollman drew a pistol and ordered them out. He said he started to get out and heard a blow.

"Read had struck him with a pistol," Gingell said.

The former caddy said they then drove back to their car and ordered Kirby to siphon gasoline from Dollman's machine.

"Gingell and I were doing that," Kirby said, "when the whole front end of the car burst into flames."

Both the witnesses said Read told them he ignited the car to "destroy fingerprints."

Read declared the first time he ever heard of Dollman "was in the jail in Louisiana with Parker. I read him an account of Dollman's death in a newspaper. That's the first time I ever heard about this case."

W. Dollman, father of the victim, was recalled to identify a picture of his son which appeared in a newspaper. He broke down on the stand and could only nod his head that that was his son.

Praying Jurors Indict Mayor In Vice Inquiry

Joplin (Mo.) Prosecutor, 2 Police Chiefs Also Accused in Charges.

By the Associated Press.

Carthage, Mo., March 31.—A vice-investigating county grand jury, that opened each session with prayer rested from its labors today after indicting the Mayor of Joplin, the Jasper County prosecutor, and two police chiefs.

Called at the instigation of young church workers, the grand jury returned a total of 108 indictments against 62 persons, mostly on charges of conducting gambling and immoral houses.

"It is the opinion of this grand jury," its report said, "that the law enforcement officers of Jasper County are about the best bunch of buck passers we have any knowledge of."

Arthur C. Maher, Joplin Mayor; Charles R. Warden, county prosecutor; Marry J. Mead, Joplin police chief, and John Tryon, Carthage police chief, were indicted for neglect of duty on charges they tolerated gambling and vice.

The officials had no comment today. They were free on bonds of $1,000 each after pleading innocent before Circuit Judge Ray E. Watson. Their trial was set for the June term of court.

Judge Watson called the grand jury after young church workers had presented him with petitions. W. H. Talker, foreman, opened each daily session of the grand jury with prayer, it was learned today.

"The situation as to open gambling in this county in general and Joplin in particular is appalling," the report asserted.

"The testimony showed conclusively that Joplin possessed an extensive and up to date 'red light' district. The porches were lighted by huge electric lights, front rooms the same, placing the inmates and their kimonas and pajamas in sharp relief as they occupied the large windows. When any man passed by these houses a reveille was played upon the window panes to attract his attention. Since this grand jury was called taps has sounded. The lights are out or dimmed, and a girl in a window is a rarity."

Teleflash Loses Phone Service; Blow to Gaming

Telecast Orders Removal of Equipment From Washington.

With a definite announcement from the Chesapeake and Potomac Telephone Company that it would refuse to furnish its facilities to a broadcasting service that has been furnishing up-to-the-minute race track information to scores of places in the District, a death blow was aimed at the hand-book racket in the District, attacks of the office of United States Attorney Leslie C. Garnett said yesterday.

Col. Garnett was notified the telephone company would refuse to continue leasing its wires and facilities to the Teleflash broadcasting service, which furnished race track information to about 100 places in the District. The broadcasting company has been the subject of police inquiry for some weeks because several of its loud speaker sets were found in suspected gaming places.

The telephone company's wires were used, it was said, to transmit the track information to those who leased the service from Teleflash. The installation of a loud speaker to the wire resulted in broadcasting of the results so that persons betting on the races had as much spot information as those at the track.

Meanwhile, orders had been received from National Telecast, Inc., a rival race news service, to disconnect all of its equipment in the District and remove equipment from some 150 places where the company was sending its news. William Plisco, Alias William Dietz, head of the local Telecast unit, is on bond on conspiracy charges. He was arrested after raids on the Albee Building, where the group maintained quarters, had shown several connections with places suspected of conducting handbooks.

Society Matron Pays $75 Fine In Traffic Court

twice as hard and no fuss was made. I was alone and didn't want to stop that time of night to find out who I hit."

Gibson said he was riding with other members of his family and had stopped in the 4500 block of Wisconsin avenue to permit a friend to alight. His car, he testified, was struck from the rear. He estimated damage of $40 and said he was forced to pursue Mrs. Guggenheim for five blocks before she stopped.

Gibson said he asked Mrs. Guggenheim to show her driver's permit, but she didn't have it with her. To his request for her registration card, he said she answered:

"There is no reason to show it to you."

Police Summoned.

Eighth Precinct police were then summoned, Judge McMahon was told, and the woman was charged with leaving the scene of an accident without making known her identity.

During Gibson's testimony, Mrs. Guggenheim conferred repeatedly with MacCracken. Once or twice she shook her head. Beside her sat E. G. Smith, an attorney attached to MacCracken's office, and in the courtroom was Dan Fullerton, secretary to Col. M. Robert Guggenheim, her husband.

In defending her action, MacCracken said Mrs. Guggenheim was "a little bit confused" and had no intentions of running away. He pointed out that the hour was 12:30 a. m. and she was driving alone.

Answered Judge McMahon:

"From the plea of guilty and extent of damage, the lady apparently wasn't concerned in attempting to learn who she had struck. I fine her $75 and in lieu of payment, 30 days in jail."

Mrs. Guggenheim Surprised.

A startled expression crossed Mrs. Guggenheim's face as Judge McMahon pronounced sentence, and she was immediately surrounded by counsel and friends. MacCracken accompanied a bailiff to the court financial office and paid the fine.

Later, in front of the courthouse, Mrs. Guggenheim posed for photographers and then left in a taxi.

Although Gibson told reporters occupants of his car escaped injury, he said the impact "jarred us quite a bit and wrecked the rear of my car."

Mrs. Guggenheim, who gave her address as 2800 Woodland drive northwest, has a wide reputation as sportswoman and horse fancier. The Guggenheim stables are known throughout the country.

Pedestrian Killed.

Meanwhile, Washington's traffic death toll rose to 37 for the year yesterday when a pedestrian, John Grassi, 40, was struck by a street car at Sixth and H streets northeast. At this time last year, 22 persons had been killed in highway mishaps.

And in Alexandria yesterday, United States Commissioner J. Barton Phillips exonerated Franklin A. Huguley, 22, 30 Rhode Island avenue northwest, in the deaths of two Washingtonians killed in a head-on collision on the Mount Vernon Memorial boulevard Tuesday night.

Jack Boone, 20, 1320 Sixth street northwest, and Sallie Jennings, 17, 824 B street northeast, were injured fatally when the motorcycle they were riding crashed into Huguley's car. The motorcycle, it was testified, swerved into the path of the automobile.

Taxi Driver Held.

A taxicab driver was held for Police Court action under the negligent homicide act and a street car motorman was exonerated by a coroner's jury after inquests in two traffic deaths.

The jury held accidental the death of John Grassi, 40, 630 Orleans place northwest, who died in Casualty Hospital early yesterday after being struck by a street car in the 600 block H street northeast.

The accidental verdict automatically released Daniel M. Crockett, 63, of Capitol Heights, Md., motorman of the street car, from any further police action.

Grassi, a chef, is survived by his wife and two daughters.

Boy Cut by Glass.

In the second inquest, the jury held Bernard Brown, 23, 3105 Fourteenth street northeast, under the negligent homicide act in connection with the death of Fire Sergt. Vernon C. Richardson, 39, 2811 Myrtle street northeast, attached to No. 17 Engine Company.

Richardson was killed when the truck he was riding in responding to an alarm collided with Brown's taxicab at Thirteenth and Irving streets northeast, March 9.

Joseph Foley, 8, of 13 Sixth street northeast, was cut seriously yesterday by flying glass when an automobile operated by his grandmother collided with an Army ambulance at Eleventh and B streets southeast.

The child was taken to Casualty Hospital in the ambulance, driven by Albert W. Coombs, of the Army Medical Center. Police said Mrs. Lena Mae Holloman, 50, was driving the passenger vehicle.

School Plans Completed.

Final plans for the District's new traffic school, to begin April 5, were completed yesterday at a meeting in the office of Traffic Director William A. Van Duzer.

Judge Edward M. Curran, of Police Court, and Assistant Corporation Counsel George Neilson, who will act as instructors, conferred with Van Duzer on the scheduled course of safety lectures.

Inspector William E. Holmes, who today becomes the Police Department's new supervisor of traffic, also will meet with Van Duzer to plan his part in the school's program. Various other city officials also wil conduct courses. More than 1,000 "students" have enrolled for classes.

High School Girls Are Questioned in 'Orgiastic' Parties

Beverly Hills, Calif., March 31 (AP). Juvenile authorities, investigating what they termed alcoholic orgiastic parties, today questioned 40 Beverly Hills High School girls and boys from "high-powered" families.

E. W. Graeb, head of the juvenile squad of the sheriff's office, declared he would concentrate on trapping the ring-leaders adding:

"We do not intend to smirch the reputation of the Beverly Hills High School girls, most of whom are of prominent, high-powered families."

Names of the students were withheld.

Four men and two girls were taken into custody by officers at a big well-appointed house in Culver City Monday night when a large party was at its height.

Three of the men were charged with contributing to the delinquency of minors, another charged with suspicion of a statutory offense. The girls were turned over to juvenile authorities.

Father Divine's Aide Hunted on Assault Charge

Girl Claims 'Assistant God' Said She Was Second Virgin Mary.

By the United Press.

New York, March 31.—A pretty, 17-year-old Denver high school student who said she was lured into the mystic flock of Harlem's Father Divine and seduced by a 200-pound "assistant God," tonight sent Federal agents on a hunt for her "heavenly mate."

The girl, Delight Jewett, told her bizzarre story to Rheat Whitely, head of Department of Justice men here, and a warrant immediately was issued in Los Angeles for the arrest of John W. Hunt, known to Father Divine followers as "Jesus the Christ," on a charge of violating the Mann act.

Both Miss Jewett and Hunt are white.

Hunt, a six-foot, 33-year-old self-confessed "mystic," met Miss Jewett in Denver last December, according to the girl's story, persuaded her she was a reincarnation of the Virgin Mary and took her to a palatial house in Beverly Hills, Calif., where she said the attack took place.

Miss Jewett said that after she met Hunt, whom she described as "awfully fat" and not much to look at, he immediately threw a trance, declaring there was a "strong spirit" in the house.

When he came to he sat up and said:

"Okay, Jeremiah, have a piece of chicken."

Ben Hur, John's chauffeur, explained this to her.

"He's being reborn," he said. "He's Jesus the Christ now."

"I was nervous at first," Miss Jewett said. "Then Hunt pointed to me and said, 'You're Mary Dove—that's your new name.' I thought they were all crazy."

She said they drove to Colorado Springs, where they registered as "John the Baptist and party of five" and all went out on the hotel lawn to play baseball with oranges.

Next they traveled to Gallup, N. Mex., she said, where Hunt noticed a scar on her hand which resembled a cross," and immediately "became wild with excitement," lectured her for hours and when they stopped to have a flat tire repaired, he said:

"You've got to have a child."

Says She "Didn't Suspect."

The supposed seduction took place December 23, she said. She went into her room and found Hunt in her bed. She said Hunt said:

"Why don't you come to bed?"

"It seems so childish now," Miss Jewett said, "but then I really didn't suspect."

Miss Jewett said she shook off the spell, went back to Denver and she and her father came to New York looking for Hunt.

Youth Finds Body Of Drowned Man With Fishing Line

Discovered by a 14-year-old colored fisherman, the body of Benjamin Tubman, 73, retired Capital Transit Co. employe, was recovered from the Eastern Branch near the Benning Bridge yesterday.

The body was pulled to the surface by John Whittaker, 14, of 1238 Wylie street northeast. Identification was established by Lieut. Charles L. Byram, of the Fire Department, Tubman's brother-in-law.

Tubman is believed to have leaped into the water after leaving his home at 1388 E street northeast on March 9. At the time of his disappearance, Mrs. Tubman told police her husband had often threatened "to end it all." He had been despondent over ill health, she said.

Administration Drops Gigantic Tenant Aid Bill

House Group Virtually Abandons of Plan to Buy Land.

000,000 for retirement of submarginal land, regarded as uneconomic to keep in cultivation.

Approval of these provisions is likely, although their form may be modified, but with Title I removed the bill departs so far from a tenancy program that Representative Boileau (Progressive), of Wisconsin, said he believed an amendment proposed from the floor to the remainder of the measure would be ruled out of order as not germane.

Boileau added that he is yet hopeful of a vote reversal within the committee, but Representatives Biermann (Democrat), of Iowa; Fulmer (Democrat), of South Carolina, and others joined Jones in statements to The Post expressing doubt on that score.

Three Reasons Given.

Members of the committee who opposed the tenant program did so for three chief reasons. They said they feared putting the Government into land-ownership on a large scale, that revenue of the Government might not come up to expectations this year and hence such expenditures might further throw the budget out of balance, and that a tenant program would be futile until production control or other legislation could assure all farmers of being able to make a living.

Refusal of the committee to approve the program was in sharp contrast with history of tenancy legislation. In June, 1936, the Senate passed a $1,050,000,000 Bankhead bill which was permitted to die in the House.

The President following up his strategical campaign appeal for tenancy action, with a clarion call for thorough study of the problem when he appointed a special committee of 38 last fall, then when this committee reported and he forwarded its recommendations to Congress, he wrote:

"We can no longer postpone action. We must begin at once . . . The Special Committee on Farm Tenancy emphasizes the necessity for action of at least four types. . . . These activities which bear such close relationship to each other should furnished a sound basis for the beginning of a program for improving the intolerable condition of the lowest income farm families."

President's Plan Dies.

The first recommendation of the committee, as quoted by the President in this message, was for "action to open the doors of ownership to tenants who now have the requisite ability and experience but who can become owners only with the assistance of liberal credit, on long terms, and technical advice." This was the recommendation embodied in the provision killed by the House committee yesterday.

The question whether the House would restore this provision could not be answered by Congressional leaders last night, although Speaker Bankhead said he hoped the committee would reconsider and give the chamber an opportunity to vote on the bill. This can be done without parliamentary objection, even if the provision is not restored to the bill by the committee, provided that group offers a bill in which the cancellation is included as a committee amendment.

Disorder Charges In Boston Prison Are Investigated

Boston, March 31 (AP).—The Boston Traveler says, in a copyrighted article, that State officials today were investigating charges that widespread disorder, distrust and unrest existed in the Charlestown State prison and that "an extremely dangerous uprising of inmates" was feared.

At the office of Warden Francis J. W. Lanagan at State prison, it was said the warden had been out of the city for two days.

When informed of the Traveler's article, Commissioner of Corrections Arthur T. Lyman declined to comment.

Gov. Charles F. Hurley, in response to queries, said he had instructed a secretary, Paul Ryan, to investigate and report to him.

The Traveler says "the charges include sensational stories of open revolt among the prisoners and a general breakdown of discipline, brought on by alleged favoritism and discrimination on the part of high officials of the institution "where the State's most desperate criminals are housed."

STOP!
THE BICARBONATE OF SODA HABIT

If You Have Stomach Trouble Due to Excess Acid Soda May Make It Worse

Bicarbonate of Soda is a wolf in sheep's clothing. You think it's helping you—and it does for the moment. But all the while it is making matters worse. Bicarbonate neutralizes the excess acid that causes heartburn, gassy stomach, belching, sourness, bloating, acid indigestion. THEN it starts neutralizing the NORMAL acid content of the stomach. This normal acid content is essential for good digestion. If it's knocked out of balance—made alkaline—your stomach gets upset, too.

The key of Bicarbonate. There's a better, safer way to stomach relief—Cal-Trate Tablets. They neutralize ONLY the EXCESS acid that causes the trouble. Then they harmlessly pass out of the system. Be sure you ask for and get Cal-Trate Tablets—they contain no Bicarbonate of Soda and are not a laxative. Used and recommended by Physicians, and all good druggists. (Adv.)

Wife of Sinclair Lewis Tells Senators 'It Can Happen Here'

it was no other than Senator Ashurst who called it 'fantastic.'"

Ashurst Takes a Bow.

While the spectators roared, Ashurst, who frankly admits his inconsistency on the court issue, flushed, then rose and bowed.

"I could not call for order after that flash of repartee," he smiled. "I have been called the Dean Emeritus of Inconsistency. I have been conferring degrees at a rapid rate on many of our witnesses, but not upon Miss Thompson."

Then he ordered the stenographer to let that "brilliant gem by the witness' remain in the record.

With but one exception, committed friends of the court bill declined to cross swords with the witness, but opponents of the measure pressed for elaboration of her views.

"Manufactured Crisis."

Questioned by Burke, she said that while she believed there is a constitutional crisis, there is no other crisis of sufficient magnitude to warrant overthrowing American traditions.

"I have found that crisis are often created, in order to advance methods for meeting them," she said. "It was a fortunate thing for Mr. Hitler that the Reichstag burned down. Many people believe that his boys set it on fire."

Burke asked if she meant "manufactured crisis."

"Yes," she said. "Mr. Mussolini lives on a state of crisis, and so does Mr. Hitler—and the instruments they make to meet them."

Senator O'Mahoney (Democrat), of Wyoming, questioned the witness on failure of "Democratic impulses" to respond in the German and Italian episodes, and expressed his "notion that an economic unit can be made to respond to democratic impulses."

Set on "Handouts."

"People cared more for what could be got out of the republic than for the republic itself, or the charter of their liberties," Miss Thompson said. "They were more interested in handouts."

She said this was what "perturbed" her about the American situation, which she said was no different in character, if different in circumstance. She said "wherever there is a large concentration of economic power, it is easy to get a totalitarian state."

"These governments might go on for years," she added. "Tyrannies are very old forms of states, and the most powerful republics are weak."

Only by "loyalty to form and tradition," she insisted, could a democracy hope to survive. She said this was the secret of success behind the British democracy, which preserves the traditions of the crown.

Urges Amendment.

Miss Thompson urged a constitutional amendment because she believed one is unavoidable in an age of national concentration.

Borchard, youthful appearing, smooth shaven, alert, said he "grew up in the school of La Follette progressivism."

The Yale professor and former State Department official criticized draftsmanship of New Deal laws. He suggested, for example, that Congress define interstate commerce.

"The Supreme Court has had to define interstate commerce from case to case," he said, "because Congress never supplied a definition of that broad term."

Cites Liquor Definition.

When he observed the court had followed the congressional definition of intoxicating liquor, Senator William H. King (Democrat), Utah, remarked:

"Congress defined intoxicating liquor as any liquor containing one-half of 1 per cent of alcohol, when everybody knew it was not intoxicating. Yet the Supreme Court, out of deference to Congress, accepted and acted on that definition."

Borchard said the Supreme Court might aprove a definition of interstate commerce such as that suggested by Dean Clark, of the Yale Law School:

"Commerce among the several States includes the production, manufacture or distribution of industrial or agricultural commodities which are destined to be or have been transported from one State to another, or compete with commodities which are destined to be or have been so transported."

Chamber Opposes End of Park Body

Abolition of the Maryland-National Capital Park and Planning Commission, which is the subject of a bill now before the State Legislature, was opposed by the Kensington Chamber of Commerce at its meeting last night.

The chamber voted against a proposal which would require a referendum on all county bond issues, took action in favor of voting machines for the county, reiterated its stand for extension of the merit system to all nonelective offices, disapproved of gasoline tax diversion and urged that proportionate allotments be made municipalities and incorporated towns from gasoline tax moneys.

President Washington Irving Cleveland named the following chairmen of standing committees: Finance, Charles W. Lane; industrial interests, Alfred B. Hastings; legislation and legal action, Charles A. Iovino; social welfare, Alfred Ray; membership, John T. Lewis; publicity and entertainment, Harry D. Appleby; public improvements, James R. Baker; public safety and fire protection, Dr. Arnold H. Scott; public utilities, Harry W. McGinniss; roads, streets and bridges, Ralph M. Berry; sanitation and public health, Dr. Joseph Cooch, and schools, Howard S. Bean.

Lord Ashley Wed To French Woman

Paris, March 31 (AP).—Lord Ashley, whose former wife now is Mrs. Douglas Fairbanks, sr., today married Mlle. Francoise Soulier in the Neuilly town hall.

Lord Ashley, 36-year-old heir of the ninth Earl of Shaftesbury, married Sylvia Hawkes, British musical comedy actress, in 1927.

They were divorced in 1935 after a suit brought by Lord Ashley in which Fairbanks was named corespondent.

Capt. James C. Barr, 81, Sea Rescue Hero, Dies

Wallasey, Cheshire, England, March 31 (AP).—Capt. Clayton Barr, 81, sea hero and former commander of several Cunard liners, died Tuesday. As captain of the Carmania in 1913 he directed ten vessels in rescuing 521 passengers from the burning liner Volturno.

During the World War he directed the sinking of the armed German merchantman Trafalgar by the Carmania, which itself was then armed. Commodore of the Cunard fleet when he retired 20 years ago, he was known as "Safe Barr."

Wage Decision Cited to Back Court Change

Shows Plan 'Sound,' Says Cummings; Hughes 'Led With Chin,' Claim.

Attorney General Homer S. Cummings, principal author of the Administration's court bill, yesterday seized on the Supreme Court's Washington State minimum wage decision as a "vivid" indication of the "soundness of the President's proposal."

Cummings' statement, broadly hinting that the court may "yield to the pressure of events," was followed by a two-way attack in the Senate on individual justices by Senators Minton, of Indiana, and Schwellenbach, of Washington, Democrats.

Minton charged Chief Justice Hughes with "political" inclinations, and said he had "led with his chin" in his recent letter to Senator Wheeler (Democrat), Montana, discussing the effect of the judiciary program on the work of the court. He said the letter, "like ancient Gaul, was divided into three parts—facts, fiction and dictum.

Schwellenbach entered the Senate debate to say the Supreme Court's change of position on State wage legislation showed one justice could have too much power. He said Justice Roberts, whose change made Monday's ruling possible, exercised "just as much power as a Hitler or a Mussolini."

Cummings in his statement also emphasized that "only by the shift of the vote of a single justice were the constitutional rights of the State Legislatures reinstated."

"So it happens that the Constitution on Monday, March 29, 1937, does not mean the same thing that it meant on Monday, June 1, 1936," he added.

The Attorney General said it was necessary to go back to the income tax case of 1894, where the change of a court vote forced submission of a constitutional amendment, to "find so dramatic a reversal."

Denying contentions that more careful drafting of legislation would avoid constitutional difficulties, Cummings said "economic predilections do not yield to skilled draftsmanship, although sometimes they yield to the pressure of events."

Minton, in his Senate attack on the Chief Justice, said Hughes "has never gotten over the way of running for President and he has never forgotten the many lessons he learned so well in the arena of politics."

Minton said the "fiction" in the Hughes letter was that part "in which he would have us believe that all the petitions for certiorari that come up to the Supreme Court receive consideration at the hands of the justices of the court when everyone knows that those petitions are handled very largely by the clerks of the justices."

21 From Japan Here Attending Textile Parley

Is Largest Delegation of 14 Nations Joining Conference.

Attending the World Textile Conference here this week are representatives of 14 nations, with the Japanese delegation of 21 men among the largest. Convoked under auspices of the International Labor Office, the delegations are studying conditions in this great industry with especial respect to the effects of the American 40-hour week on international trade.

Three types of delegates are attending the meetings in the Labor Department auditorium — groups representing government, employers, and workers. In the Japanese delegation these are numerically divided, in order, at 8, 7, and 4, with 2 delegates for the International Labor Office.

Purpose of the conference is purely investigative, the Japanese delegation said yesterday, in its headquarters at the Washington Hotel. No recommendations or findings are anticipated, unless at some later date.

Keinosuke Zen, managing director of the National Confederation of Industrial Associations of Japan, chief spokesmen for Japanese capitalists, said yesterday that the recently signed textile agreement between the United States and Japan on Japanese exports to this country "is highly satisfactory." This agreement calls for importation of 150,000,000 square yards of all types of Japanese goods in 1937 and a reduction to 100,000,000 yards in 1938.

The spread of Japanese cotton textile business over the globe has come to a standstill, he said, because of new tariffs and quota limitations thrown up by such nations as China and India and the United States.

Representing 80 per cent of Japanese organized labor here is H. Koizumi. J. Kitacka heads the government delegation of eight men. I. F. Ayusawa, director of the Tokyo Bureau of International Labor, heads the group from that branch of the international agency.

An estate of approximately $160,000 was left by Mrs. Agnes Miller Trorer, who died March 2, it was shown in District Court yesterday when a petition for the probate of her will was filed. She was a sister of William C. and Allison N. Miller, real estate operators.

George E. Trorer, the husband, was named as the principal beneficiary. After providing for a number of small bequests Mrs. Trorer asked that the remainder of her estate be held in trust for the benefit of her husband for life. Ten years after her death, or at the death of Mr. Trorer, if that should occur first, the estate is to be divided among various relatives.

Those who shared in the estate were: Agnes Miller Birney, $5,000; James G. Birney, Dion S. Birney, jr., Arthur A. Birney, Sarah B. Miller, William C. Miller, jr., Allison N. Miller, jr., Edward John Miller, Suzanne Miller and Catherine Miller, $2,000 each; Dorothy, John and Marjorie, Sarah and Catherine Miller, $300 each; Mabel Miller and Cotherine Miller, $2,000 each; All Souls Memorial Church, $1,000; and after Mr. Trorer's death, the estate is to be divided into quarters, with Frances Miller Brockett, a sister being given a share, and Mrs. Trorer's two brothers and her other sister, Sarah Miller Birney, being given equal shares. Dion S. Birney, an attorney, filed the petition.

General Strike On Autonomy Feared in India

Demonstrations Forbidden in Fight Against New Constitution.

By the Associated Press.

Calcutta, India, March 31.—The government of India, tensely watching inauguration of a new constitution granting semi-autonomy to 11 provinces, tonight clamped a strict ban on giant demonstrations and a proposed general strike.

The secretary of the Congress Party, bitter opponent of the constitution, and five leading party members were forbidden to organize processions, but other methods of expressing disapproval were planned.

The eve of the constitutional inauguration found India facing momentuous problems, aggravated by the refusal of Congress Party adherents to form governments in the six provinces where they won clear majorities.

Police announced they would assist anyone compelled, against his will, to close his shop during a proposed hartal (general strike) tomorrow.

The Calcutta Corporation, similar to a city council and dominated by native Indians, adopted resolutions closing city schools and the corporation offices to register disapproval of the new constitution.

Congress Party adherents protest that the constitution, provided by the British parliamentary act of 1935, is unsatisfactory because it does not grant India complete home rule.

Minority party ministries, the result of Congress Party refusals to participate in the new governments, have been formed by all provinces except Assam and the united provinces on the northern frontier. The ministries are coalitions.

New legislatures, the first step provided by the constitution, took office at midnight, thereby ending the old dyarchical form of government in 11 provinces.

Under the old dual system the Governor, appointed by the British Monarch, administered certain "reserved subjects" which the legislature and its ministers could not touch.

The new document still reserves special powers to the governors, but gives the provincial legislatures a status similar to the position of Canadian provinces.

The Congress Party objects to the governors' powers to maintain peace, to protect the interests of minorities and the rights of native rulers.

First Lady Pokes Fun At Her Own Lectures

By the Associated Press.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt poked fun yesterday at her own lecture efforts.

In a talk to 150 congressional wives who came to Washington with her in 1932, she related:

"I went to a certain State college to speak twice—in the afternoon and evening. The college president was anxious that I shake hands with the audience after both programs. I explained that I don't make a practice of it. But the president said, 'If you have to cancel anything, I'd rather you shook hands and didn't give the lecture.'"

Two 6,000-Year-Old Temples Uncovered in Mesopotamia

Excavations Below Many Cultural Levels Reveal Buildings Declared by Scientists to Be World's Oldest Civilized Settlement.

By the Associated Press.

New York, March 31.—Discovery of what is believed to be the world's oldest civilized settlement—a mound in northeastern Mesopotamia dating earlier than 4,000 B.C.—was announced tonight by the American Institute for Persian Art and Archaeology.

Excavations by an institute expedition between November and February below many subsequent civilization levels on the mound, Director Arthur A. Pope said, disclosed a group of buildings well over 6,000 years old.

There a group of several hundred persons, probably of the Armenoid type—tall, lean and black-haired, with long legs—settled in a fertile plain, abandoning a nomadic hunting existence and staring communal life and agriculture, evidence indicated.

The previous oldest known settlement was a site near Persepolis, Persia, some thousand miles southeast, dating about 4,000 B. C., which was discovered in 1933 by Ernest Herzfeld, German scientist.

The new site, Tepe Gawra, was located two years ago as a central point from which radiating exploration disclosed more and more modern civilizations.

The expedition which made the latest discoveries was headed by Dr. E. A. Speiser, of the University of Pennsylvania.

At the bottom level of the mound there are three principal buildings, two temples and a shrine, opening on a court surrounded by private houses, made of gray brick with painted decorations.

The anthropoligical type of the inhabitants has not been ascertained from the few human remains, but the people were still in the pre-writing stage, using pictures to express their ideas.

The discovery, Pope said, supports the theory that man's communal life started in the region.

Ohio House Indorses Court Reorganization

Columbus, Ohio, March 31 (AP).—The Ohio House of Representatives finally approved today a resolution indorsing President Roosevelt's judiciary reorganization proposal by a 69-43 vote.

A previous joint resolution was sidetracked in the Senate. Republican Floor Leader William McCulloch today attempted a filibuster, but was ruled out of order.

uniforms of Italian Somaliland units—arrived in Spanish Morocco on the night of March 15.

Italian technicians, aviators and engineers have replaced virtually all of the German rebel "volunteers" in Spanish Morocco. The Germans were sent to Malaga and Algeciras to replace Italian units.

Franco's only major offensive today was on the Basque front, in the northwest. It resolved itself into an artillery duel around Ochandiano and Durango.

In Durango 25 persons, mostly women, were killed when a bomb smashed through a church during mass and 13 nuns were killed when rebel airplanes destroyed Augustine Convent.

A few miles away, off the coast of Santander, the rebel warship Espana seized three loyalist merchant ships, but was forced to abandon them when loyalist planes attacked.

Dead Rebels Fill Trenches.

With Government Armies at Andujar, Spain, March 31 (AP).—First detailed accounts of the last two days' fighting on the Cordoba front told tonight of an insurgent loss exceeded only by the Fascist-Italian rout in Guadalajara, leaving insurgent trenches heaped to the rims with dead.

Couriers came to this field headquarters with dispatches which said three whole government companies spent all of today burying enemy dead which they found in the trenches after the government's capture of Alcarecejos and Villaneuva del Duque, towns which defend rich government-held mineral lands.

Other soldiers toiled all day to load captured insurgent war material into trucks.

Three government columns pressed on the heels of the retreating insurgents; one along the main road from Alcerecejos to Espiel, the other two along west roads from Poozblanco to Villaharta and from Villaneuva del Duque to Pueblo Nuevo del Terrible.

The three objectives are strung along the highway to Cordoba City. Their wall would put that insurgent-held provincial capital in imminent danger.

Warships on Guard.

London, March 31 (AP).—British, French and Dutch warships patrolled waters off embroiled Spain tonight under firm instructions to protect their merchant shipping against interference or seizure by Spanish insurgent vessels.

Aroused by the stoppage and attacks on steamers, France joined Great Britain in warning the insurgents to keep their hands off ships carrying cargoes not banned by the nonintervention agreement which prohibits sending arms and men to Spain.

An additional group of Dutch warships arrived off Spain and took up their patrol, ready for action should a Dutch steamer be molested.

Britain lost no time in making good the declaration that her merchantmen would be protected. The destroyer Gipsy went into action today by escorting the British steamer Thorpe Hall to Bilboa, Spain, from Gibraltar.

The Thorpe Hall was en route to Bilboa yesterday when she was ordered to halt by an insurgent gunboat in the Strait of Gibraltar. Instead, the steamer made a run for it and put into Gibraltar for protection.

Rome Backs Neutrality.

Rome, March 31 (AP).—Italy today declared her intention to abide by the 27-nation Spanish non-intervention agreement, provided other powers maintain neutrality, and asserted Italian troops are not being held in readiness to go to Spain.

Dino Alfieri, Italian press minister, made a formal statement of Italy's position after conferring with Premier Mussolini and Count Ciano, the foreign minister.

"The Italian attitude toward the Spanish situation remains what it has always been: non-intervention, control, and that the whole attitude in regard to execution of decisions of the (non-intervention) committee in London must have the character of general and equal application," Alfieri said.

The minister warned that Italy, however, would be "forced to re-examine its own position" if direct or indirect intervention in Spain "should continue to be carried out."

Widow of Confederate Veteran to Be Buried in Beaufort, S. C.

Funeral services for Mrs. Robert Thomson, 86, widow of one of Charleston's war-time Citadel cadets, will be held this afternoon at 1 o'clock in National Baptist Memorial Church, of which she was a charter member.

Then Mrs. Thomson's body will be taken to Beaufort, S. C., and buried beside that of her husband, who died several years ago, after he and his wife had celebrated their golden wedding anniversary.

Born in Stone Haven, Scotland, in 1850, Mrs. Thomson met her husband while he was on a holiday from the University of London. She came to Beaufort with him in 1873, and there she witnessed the last days of Reconstruction in South Carolina.

Later the couple moved to the Pacific Coast. About 1885 Thomson came to Washington as an official with the Treasury Department.

Besides Mrs. MacNulty, Mrs. Thomson is survived by four children, Mrs. James Furse, of Savannah, Ga.; Robert Thomson, of Garrett Park; Mrs. L. J. Potter, of Garrett Park, and David L. Thomson, of Chevy Chase. Four grandchildren and three great-grandchildren also survive.

doctors thought safe for patients. Three, advanced age or other physical weakness making fever too risky.

The special importance of fever treatment to women with gonorrhea was reported by Janet and Dreyfus and by Drs. W. M. Bierman and E. A. Horowitz of New York. Bierman was last night honored with membership in the French Legion of Honor for his fever work.

Fever treatment in women, these physicians said, avoids the major operations often otherwise required. Dr. Bierman reported 121 women treated by fever in six years with 93 per cent success.

Three United States Medical Corps physicians reported a year's experiment comparing a group of soldiers treated by old methods with another using artificial fever.

"Fever therapy," they stated, "accomplished more cures in gonorrhea in the male than does chemotherapy (medicine)."

Army Tests Made.

These Army men were Capt. E. H. Parsons, Maj. P. N. Bowman and Lieut. D. E. Plummer.

Dr. Stafford L. Warren, of the University of Rochester School of Medicine, said it is possible to test time needed to kill each type of germ and time the patient's fever accordingly.

One case of gonorrheal heart disease, a malady generally regarded as hopeless, was reported "recovered" through fever by Dr. Hugo A. Freund and Dr. Walter L. Anderson, Harper Hospital, Detroit.

U. S. Agents Drop Case Against Mattson Suspect

Tucumcari, N. Mex., March 31 (AP). Federal authorities today dropped the case of Vern Charlton, 34, Seattle, held here since Saturday for questioning in the kidnap-slaying of Charles Mattson, Tacoma, Wash.

Sheriff Fred White said Alex Street and M. C. Faulkner, Department of Justice operatives, "have withdrawn from the case and have advised Charlton be released."

Repeal Called 'New Approach' To Liquor Problem's Solution

Edward B. Dunford, Anti-Saloon League Attorney, Declares Report of Speech at Alexandria Was Misleading; Clarifies His Stand.

Because Edward B. Dunford, attorney of the Anti-Saloon League of America, states he was quoted incorrectly in The Post yesterday, his letter of complaint is being printed to correct any errors that were made.

Dunford wrote The Post as follows:

"Permit me to call your attention to the misleading and erroneous article appearing on the front page of today's Washington Post bearing the caption, 'Drys' Attorney Lauds Repeal, Terms Prohibition a Failure,' the opening paragraph of which reads:

"'Conditions are better under repeal than they were under national prohibition, Edward B. Dunnington, attorney for the National Anti-Saloon League, told a mass meeting in First Baptist Church, Alexandria, last night.'

"In the first place, not even the name of the speaker is correct. My name is Edward B. Dunford, not Dunnington.

"In the second place, there is absolutely nothing in anything I said to justify the statement that conditions are better under repeal than they were under national prohibition. I was discussing the constitutional or legal status that exists under the twenty-first amendment as contrasted with the constitutional or legal status obtaining prior to the eighteenth amendment. I pointed out that the twenty-first amendment provided a reallocation of legislative authority between the State and national governments; that it had returned to each State the right to determine the kind of liquor laws best adapted to its citizens; and that it left to the National Government the duty and obligation of policing the liquor traffic in those spheres which properly inhere in it under our Constitution, such as policing the liquor traffic in interstate commerce, supervising production and distribution, the taxing power, etc.

"I further stated that this afforded a new approach toward the solution of the liquor problem in the interests of social protection that was not generally appreciated. While there has been slight effort made to discharge this responsibility, the opportunity to do so exists when the people desire to avail themselves of it. The duty of the friends of temperance is to agitate and educate with respect to the effects of alcoholic beverages. If this is done it offers the hope of a more permanent and lasting progress. It is our duty to let the people know the truth with respect to the liquor problem, and the truth will make the Nation free.

"Your courtesy in correcting this misstatement and giving the matter equal publicity to the original article will be greatly appreciated."

Dunford's talk was reported by Charles M. Shepperson, The Post's Alexandria representative. Shepperson, who has been a stenographer since 1899, having served 15 years in such capacity in the Isthmian Canal Commission, in other Government agencies, in private employ and as a court stenographer, took shorthand notes of Dunford's talk.

Big John L. was Easy-Goin'
BUT HE HAD THE PUNCH THAT MAKES A CHAMPION!

By "Silver Dollar" Brady

JOHN L. SULLIVAN was plumb polite to everybody, genial and agreeable-like.

But squared-off in the ring, he meant business! Whenever he let go with the old "one-two" the referee automatically said "-nine-ten!" He could punch.

And a champeen whiskey, like Silver Dollar, is agreeable, too. It makes heaps of friends—and it keeps every one of them.

But there's nothin' "sissy" about it. It "takes hold" with a heart-warmin' glow. Silver Dollar Bourbon is gentle-actin' but you know it's there!

Silver Dollar is smooth and mellow as a Western sunset. It's distilled the slow, honest way—an' there's 79 years' experience back of every drop.

Only choice grains, same as goes into expensive whiskies, and tested spring water are used. Then Silver Dollar is aged in charred oak for 18 months, for added richness and quality. That's why it's so pleasant to drink straight or mixed up in fancy highballs.

Try Silver Dollar today, folks. Step into the nearest tavern, or better yet, take a bottle home with you tonight. You'll sure like this gentle-actin' straight Bourbon—an' you'll be coming back for more!

Revenue Slump Perils Plan to Balance Budget

Believe Demands Also Menaces President's Proposal to Cut Expenses.

By the United Press.

President Roosevelt's plans to balance the budget within the next 12 months were threatened last night by a sharp slump in anticipated Treasury revenues and by demands from the Nation's leading mayors that the Government provide $2,200,000,000 for relief in the 1938 fiscal budget.

At the same time strong Congressional opposition was developing to imposition of new or higher taxes at this session. Chairman Robert L. Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, of the House Ways and Means Committee in which all tax legislation must originate, said it was "extremely unlikely" new levies would be considered until Government spending had been curbed.

"The time has arrived for us to be more cautious and to get away from emergency expenditures in order to relieve the taxpayers," he said after a meeting of the joint Congressional Tax Committee. He added, however, that an extension of so-called "nuisance" taxes, which yield the Treasury $500,000,000 a year and which expire June 30, would be sought.

President Roosevelt began the first of a series of conferences with WPA Administrator Harry L. Hopkins yesterday on the amount of money he will ask from Congress to finance relief during the 1938 fiscal year beginning July 1.

A completely balanced budget in 1939, including the amount needed for debt retirement was forecast by Mr. Roosevelt "if improvement in economic conditions continues at the present rate." No indication since has come from the Chief Executive on the amount of the forthcoming relief appropriations, but the U. S. Conference of Mayors weeks ago condemned the $1,537,123,000 figure is inadequate.

Yesterday, two hours after Hopkins had left the White House, Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, conferred with Mr. Roosevelt. LaGuardia said the conference of Mayors insisted upon a minimum appropriation of $2,200,000,000.

April Fool's Day, Jokester's Delight, Will Test 'Unwary'

The practical jokester, like the groundhog, has his day and it comes with the dawn of this morning. It's April Fool's Day and before the sun sets you may encounter such things as these:

A note on your desk requesting you to call a certain number and ask for Mr. Wolfe. You will probably get the Zoo.

A note on your desk requesting you to call a number and ask for Mr. Toomb. You will probably get a cemetery.

What seems to be a pocketbook will be lying in the street. You reach for it and it zips away while a laugh goes up from a string-puller nearby.

Someone will say that your coat's torn in the rear and the quick investigation will end in an "April Fool" that gets as big a laugh as when "April Fool" was first originated.

This is the day and this is the warning.

D. C. Mission Lacks $10,000 to Aid Needy

The Central Union Mission's appeal for $15,000, launched several days ago, has brought in $5,000 and Mrs. John S. Bennett is appealing to the Washington public to contribute the remaining $10,000 to enable the mission to continue its work of helping the needy.

Speedy Arrest Is Promised in Triple Slaying

and had been sleeping only three hours in his quarters behind his upholstery shop when a detective was sent for him.

The official explanation was that investigators wanted to hear again how he had passed the night of the crime. He had told them he spent most of the evening playing skeeball in a Third avenue barroom about a mile south of the Beekman Hill neighborhood.

While he was repeating his account of his movement for Dodge police sent out word to the proprietors of the Third avenue barroom that they were not to discuss the case with anyone.

Meanwhile, the bodies of the women lay in state in an undertaking establishment. A crowd of friends and curiosity seekers passed the biers during the day. Funeral services were set for tomorrow in th Roman Catholic Church of St. Gregory the Great, in west Ninetieth street. Burial will be in a Yonkers cemetery.

Gedeon, who has described his slain daughter as "a butterfly" who attracted many men, suggested in an interview yesterday that "a millionaire from Boston," whose name he did not know, was responsible for the triple tragedy.

Incensed at the model's refusal to accept his favors, the millionaire hired someone to kill her, the father suggested. Investigators displayed little interest in his theory.

Gedeon had been questioned before and released, the police saying he had explained his movements satisfactorily.

When he went to the apartment Sunday, and found the bodies, he was accompanied by his other daughter, Mrs. Joseph Kudner, and her husband. Mrs. Gedeon had invited them in for Easter dinner.

In recalling him to the station house today, a police official said:

"There are certain points about Gedeon's story we want him to clear up."

Police officials today said it was "unfortunate" that the name of James Fitton, a former appraiser for the Home Owner's Loan Corporation, had been dragged into the case. He was questioned briefly last night after investigators learned that Mrs. Gedeon had testified against him in 1935 in an extortion case. He disclaimed any knowledge of the triple killing and was released.

Crude Model of Comptometer, Built in 1884, Given to Museum

An old macaroni box filled with an arrangement of wheels, rubber bands, meat skewers and staples, was formally presented yesterday to Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, to be added to the most cherised objects in the collections of the United States National Museum.

The presentation was made to Dr. Abbot by the family of the late Dorr E. Felt, the inventor, and representatives of the Felt & Tarrant Manufacturing Co., of Chicago.

This scarred and weathered old macaroni box was designed and constructed 52 years ago by the young Chicago mechanic who was destined to solve the problem of producing a practical, key-driven, multiple-order calculating machine.

It was on Thanksgiving Day, 1884, that Felt began work on this crude wooden model. Most of the material was such as he was able to gather from neighborhood merchants. The "macaroni box" served as the case and frame of the machine.

Naturally, this crude expression of his idea was far from his vision of a perfect calculating machine, notwithstanding the fact that, imperfect and unoperable as it was, it nevertheless embodied the underlying principles that characterize the finished product known today as the "comptometer."

By September of 1887 eight finished machines were built. One of the first of these produced came to the actuary's office of the United States Treasury in Washington. After long service it was transferred to the National Museum, as was also another very early model formerly used by the United States Geological Survey. To these the company has added newer models from time to time. The addition of the macaroni box model makes the collection quite complete. The presentation of the original model is approximately on the fiftieth anniversary of the earliest commercial production of the machine.

$9,000 Is Left By Dr. W. A. White

An estate valued at $9,000 was left by Dr. William A. White, superintendent of St. Elizabeths Hospital, who died March 7, it was revealed in District Court yesterday. His will, filed a few days ago, designated Mrs. Lola White, his wife, as his sole beneficiary. In addition to the money, his estate included an interest in a New York publishing firm.

Mrs. White told the court, through Frank A. Fenning, that her husband owned real estate in eastern Massachusetts worth $3,000 and had $6,000 due him from the Government in retirement fund and back pay.

The Judicial Function.

Minority opinions of the Supreme Court deservedly arouse keen public interest. From its very nature a closely reasoned dissent will often contribute greatly to a more intelligent understanding of our constitutional system. Such essays on the fundamentals of our government lose none of their fundamental value because a majority of the court fails to be convinced of their applicability to the case in hand.

The dissenting opinion in the Washington Minimum Wage Case was prefaced by a very noteworthy plea for independent judgment on the bench. Every judge takes an oath to support the Constitution, Mr. Justice Sutherland pointed out, and each must decide in his own mind whether there is a reasonable doubt as to the validity of the legislation under review. "It is the right of those in the minority to disagree," he said, "and sometimes, in matters of grave importance, their imperative duty to voice their disagreement at such length as the occasion demands—always, of course, in terms which, however forceful, do not offend the proprieties or impugn the good faith of those who think otherwise."

Unfortunately, the good faith of justices in performing their grave and delicate duty is not always recognized. And the phrase "personal economic predilections," torn from its context in an earlier dissenting opinion, has actually been used by the President as evidence that "the majority of the court has been assuming the power to pass on the wisdom" of acts of Congress. This groundless but damaging charge was nicely countered by Mr. Justice Sutherland when he pointed out, in Monday's dissenting opinion, that "it is not competent for any department of the Government to change a Constitution, or declare it changed, simply because it appears ill adapted to a new state of things."

This dissenting opinion, carefully studied, will do much to dismiss the further contention that the only check upon the exercise of judicial power is the judge's own faculty of self-restraint. "Self-restraint," it is pointed out, "belongs in the domain of will and not of judgment. The check upon the judge is that imposed by his oath of office, by the Constitution and by his own conscientious and informed convictions; and since he has the duty to make up his own mind and adjudge accordingly, it is hard to see how there could be any other restraint."

Any weakness in the logic of the minority view as to the legality of State minimum wage laws does not diminish the force of this important analysis of the nature of the judicial function.

The Dissolvent Of Defeat.

Evidence is piling up that, on the heels of military disaster, the Spanish insurgents and their foreign allies are plagued by growing disaffection, in places approaching open mutiny.

Following the Italian rout at Brihuega it has become increasingly plain that the Spaniards fighting under Gen. Franco's banner are embittered against their quondam allies from Italy. It is also reported that the Italian soldiers in Spain are themselves a prey to disgust and disillusionment.

Sooner or later it was certain that the fierce nationalism of the Spaniards, a people renowned for their pride, would rebel against the foreign invaders. No people likes to be told, by word or deed, that it is incapable of being master in its own home.

The importation by the British of Hessian mercenaries was worth many regiments to Gen. Washington, helping to consolidate anti-British sentiment in the colonies during the Revolutionary War. A similar phenomenon was to be observed in Russia at the time of the Allied intervention. Many Russians who had no use for the Bolshevik creed nevertheless fought under the Soviet banner in order to preserve their country against its invaders and their counter-revolutionary puppets.

There is no doubt that the liberal employment by Gen. Franco of Moors, Foreign Legionnaires and German and Italian "volunteers" has helped to stiffen the resistance of Loyalist Spain. Now open hostility to the mercenaries fighting on the rebel side appears to be developing in regions nominally in Franco's control. There is no greater dissolvent of unnatural alliances than defeat.

Under the circumstances, there may be underlying meaning in the recent announcement of Count Dino Grandi, Italy's representative on the London non-intervention committee, that his country plans no immediate withdrawal of its soldiers from Spain. It may mean that Mussolini does not desire the return to Italy at this time of some thousands of disillusioned fellow-countrymen who have no cause to cheer the Duce for having sent them to fight a people capable of far sterner resistance than the Ethiopians.

Japan's Political Crisis.

A struggle of increasing intensity between the civil and the military elements in Japan has now reached a critical stage. Dissolution of the Diet yesterday demands a new election, the results of which will be of far-reaching importance.

In the five years following the Mukden incident of September 18, 1931, which marked the beginning of the Japanese conquest of Manchuria, the Japanese military had it all their own way in foreign and in domestic policy. Of late, however, as the ill-success of these policies has become manifest, the civilian elements have tended to assert themselves more and more. At first timidly, but with growing vigor and determination, the political leaders have fought hard to curb the power of the militarists.

Their attacks were largely responsible for the overthrow of the Hirota cabinet. Then, having tasted blood, they lashed out at the Hayashi regime which took office on January 29, after a week's interregnum when the future of Japan's parliamentary system hung in the balance.

Startled and to some extent frightened by the attack, the War Office issued a conciliatory statement denying any intent to impose fascism on Japan. The army, said this note, simply wished to see parliamentary government develop along sound lines. But this display of moderation has left the civilians unconvinced. The fight continued. The result has been that during the past two months the Diet has been in a state of almost unbroken deadlock. With one important exception, practically all the measures favored by the army leaders have been held up.

The exception was the budget for the coming year. Not without reluctance, the Diet finally gave way to the pressure exerted by the government and the fighting forces and approved it. The appropriation provides for an expenditure of $401,900,000 on the fighting services out of a record total of $802,000,000. With this law in their pockets, the army leaders came to the conclusion that the time was at hand to cut the Gordian knot by dissolving the Diet and holding new elections. The latter must be held within thirty days.

In view of the encouraging popular response to the assault on the militarists, victory for the civilian element at the forthcoming election would seem to be assured. Actually this is anything but certain.

The present government, largely a creature of the army, controls the election machinery. The next election may be "made," as other elections in Japan have been. It is quite possible, therefore, that unless the unexpected happens and the Japanese people are given a free and unimpeded opportunity to voice their collective will, the next Diet may be even more amenable to bureaucratic control than was the outgoing one.

Such a development could hardly solve the basic problems which provide the setting for the current struggle between the civilians and the militarists. It is one thing to vote enormous military and naval budgets. It is another thing to raise the necessary revenue without bringing on a collapse of Japan's already waning industrial boom.

The Origin Of Maple Syrup.

The North Country's "big run" is soon to begin; a run not of shad but of sugar—maple sugar. Properly speaking, of course, it's the sap that runs, not the sugar. Already "first runs," from which the most delicately flavored and colored syrup and sugar is obtained, have been reported from a few sunny spots in Vermont and New Hampshire. But the snow generally still lies too deeply there for any stirrings among the maple roots.

The sun is rising higher in the heavens, however. Soon pungs will be loaded with spigots and buckets as farmers set off for their upper lots. Maples pay many a New England farm's taxes. Last year it is estimated that this extra dividend of spring amounted to nearly $3,500,000. Coal tar flavoring and molasses have not yet been blended well enough to fool the millions who demand the authentic sweet of the maple.

Woksis, the mighty hunter of Indian lore, is said to have been the first to taste the dainty. His squaw, Moqua, was the inadvertent Savarin in the case. On a spring day long ago, it is still told, Woksis threw his tomahawk into a tree, picked up his bow and went off hunting. The dutiful Moqua fell to embroidering moccasins for her brave and forgot entirely about his dinner. When she remembered, she discovered she had no water in which to cook his moose meat.

The river was some distance away and the path was muddy. So she set the meat to boil in the sap which had conveniently run out of the maple wounded by the tomahawk. It looked and tasted like water and was harmless, she decided. When Woksis returned, he found the sap boiled down and the meat crusted with sugar. At first amazed, then delighted with the flavor, the mighty hunter neglected to praise the moccasins, instead rushing out to sing the praises of his squaw's great discovery of a new seasoning.

Sociologists sourly discount this agreeable legend. They point out that the Indians had no vessels capable of withstanding the heat for the long boiling required by maple sap.

May their pancakes always be cold!

Controlling The Purse Strings.

Two groups of experts studying financial administration by the Federal Government have arrived at very different conclusions. The Brownlow committee appointed by President Roosevelt urged that the control of expenditures be transferred from the Comptroller General to the Treasury. The report now submitted to the Select Committee on Investigation of Executive Agencies by the Brookings Institution contends that such authority should remain with an independent agency responsible only to Congress.

The chief significance of the Brookings report is that it builds up a thoughtful and well-authenticated case against the relinquishment of independent control over Government expenditures. The Brownlow committee advanced the theory that "the control of expenditures is essentially an executive function, whereas the audit of such expenditures should be independent of executive authority or direction." For one individual to exercise the "control function" as well as the "audit function," it contended, creates an undesirable and anomalous position.

Investigators for the Brookings Institution agree that a number of defects in the present system should be corrected. Likewise, they accept the view that the President is the "business manager of the Government," responsible for initiation of the budget, promotion of administrative efficiency and control of the rates of expenditures. But at that point it departs from the views of the Brownlow committee. Since Congress remains the "final authority in financial matters," the Brookings experts think it should maintain an independent agency to make "the final audit and settlement . . . of all claims and accounts in which the Government is interested."

There is ample ground for dissatisfaction with the operation of the present system. It encourages confusion and delay. But this does not mean that the basic principles on which the system rests are unsound. The new study indicates that some deficiencies in the exchange of information can be overcome by co-operation between the Treasury Department and the proposed Office of Audit and Settlement which would succeed the General Accounting Office. Moreover, a new plan of inter-agency committees is suggested so that the views of administrative officers could be represented. And to minimize confusion "all functions properly belonging to an agency of legislative control" would be transferred to a single Auditor General or a board of three responsible to Congress alone.

The need for a systematic check upon the acts of administrative officers "for legality, accuracy and regularity" is indisputable. Assuming that the chief defects in the present system can be remedied as the Brookings Institution suggests, the only major question remaining would be whether these checks should be applied by an agent of Congress or the President. Certainly the present report has greatly strengthened the case for control independent of the actual spending agencies.

Still No Word.

At a banquet here this week the achievements of a national airline were being extolled. The company's planes are good, said a speaker, and so are its pilots. Then he added, "they have to be good because they fly in and out of Washington airport." It was an edged remark, sharpened by the fact that the hazards of the Capital's air terminal have been recognized for years. Yet, to date, little has been done to improve the situation.

Last fall a commission to end airport commissions was appointed. It was charged with studying the local problem and was instructed to take an option on the most desirable site for a permanent landing field. Talk ran high of acting before the present Congress convened, so that the matter could be entirely disposed of before the legislators immersed themselves in the major problems of the day. But here it is April and still no final word has come from the commission.

Echoes of discussions have been heard emanating from the commission's rooms. But they are in some respects more disappointing than no word at all. For they seem to indicate that two or three sites may be approved by the commission and that the final choice between them may be left to the Congress as a whole.

This, of course, would merely revive the whole, long controversy. It is not possible sites but a positive decision that is the obvious need.

Bequest Of A Debt.

From the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

The Goshen, N. Y., man who left a will designating a son and three grandchildren to share and share alike all his lawful debts, but did not mention real estate valued at $3,000, followed somewhat closely the spirit of the times, economically speaking, though he was franker than most persons. Every year for a considerable period the voting grandparents and parents of the country have been piling up gigantic debts for the taxpayers among their children and great-great-great grandchildren to pay, but, unlike the Goshen satirist, they do not mention the fact.

Cherry And Other Trees.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: It has been touching to read of the valiant efforts of horticulturists in the offices of the National Capital Parks to save the cherry trees from frost. It is also interesting to learn that there are any more horticulturists left in the department. From recent developments and from the present well-scraped and barren appearance of our local parks, one would suppose that the various commissions and committees that control them at present were entirely in the hands of blueprint draftsmen and steam-shovel engineers, whose sole concern was to pour 2 square feet of concrete or asphalt where but one was before.

Fortunately for our much publicized and photographed cherry trees, these have acquired a commercial value and so will be protected. Or at least until they too are uprooted to make way for the proposed Jefferson Mausoleum, which to date is the crowning achievement of the concrete and cement operators, furnishing as it does the biggest sinkhole possible to be filled up with masonry.

When it is finished I wonder how many tourists that will attract compared to the cherry trees. And I wonder how long it will be before those in authority learn that other trees as well as the Japanese cherries have value as a lure for countless thousands of annual visitors, even if to a certain order of mind they have none for their own sakes.

We go ahead rapidly killing the goose that lays the golden egg. Lafayette Square, for over a century a sylvan beauty spot, now looks about as inviting and well-kept as a cow pasture. Magnolia trees, literally worth thousands of dollars each, are hacked down to make another parking lot, garishly disfigured with huge red and yellow signs. Automobile storage lots, hot dog stands and filling stations, surrounded by unkempt streets with ragged remains of untended trees, do not make a beautiful or attractive city.

Neither do $25,000,000 worth of "forest of petrified pillars," marble mausoleums and speedways through barren parks, whether perpetrated in the name of the McMillan plan, the L'Enfant plan or any other specious justification.

Traffic Campaign.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As president of the Federation of the Business Men's Associations of the District of Columbia, I wish to most heartily commend you on Howard F. Wentworth's articles on "Safety—Watch Your Step—and Live!" Your campaign for the betterment of traffic conditions in Washington is identical with the platform of this federation. We, like yourself, are most eager to lower the accident rate of the Capital.

The federation, individually and as a whole, offer their sincerest praise for your efforts and their co-operation in the splendid work you are doing.

Two Criticisms Of Labor Today.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: That the action of the sit-down strikers is illegal and cannot be justified under any rule of logic or legal procedure is evidenced by the fact that such proceedings usurp the rights of the individual. Furthermore, they are an appropriation of personal property without compensation or due process of law. It is, therefore, unconstitutional and outlawed by every legal stratagem known to judicial procedure. Besides it is a gross violation of every moral decency and every spiritual sense that organized civilized society possesses.

It is not possible to exchange the tyranny of monopoly or so-called "entrenched wealth" for the dyed-in-the-wool despotic rule of an arrogant labor chief and hope or expect to achieve social advantages for the underdog. A labor union with unlimited power such as Mr. Lewis is seeking can be just as tyrannical and just as much of a monopoly and even worse than any combination of so-called "entrenched wealth," because of its greater numerical strength and superior physical force. Both can, if entrusted with unlimited power, become a menace to society and wreck every aspiration and good intention the people desire to achieve through their Government.

An arrogantly usurped labor power placed there by force of physical prowess is distinctly more harmful and detrimental to social progress and the rights and liberties of the people than the tyranny of monopolistic corporate wealth. This is because of the superior intellectual plane and better economically trained mind of the latter.

I would rather take my chances with the so-called "economic royalist" if there be such a tribe. Their possessions have been acquired through normal proper and legal application of economic laws. The labor leader's mind, however, must of necessity have been closed more or less to moral suasion and the reason of logic in order to acquire through forceful and illegal seizures these powers and ill-gotten gains.

TAXPAYER.
Washington, March 27.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have noticed that while numerous criticisms are made about the present so-called "sit-down" strike situation, no one seems to have offered a constructive solution.

It would seem that the main question to ask is what manner and what kind of people have we placed in our high offices, such as the President of the United States and governors of several of the States, that have tolerated these illegal conditions?

There are several laws in practically each State of the Union referring to the duties of a governor and there is a law in the U. S. Revised Statutes, section 5299, which commands the President to execute his authority to, among other things, protect the rights of private property, etc. By what right or authority do these executives take it upon themselves to use their own personal discretions and whims to ignore their oaths of office?

It was only a few years ago that we had a small group of veterans who marched to the Capitol to effect the passage of the bonus act. During their stay here they lived on the Anacostia flats and they were not particularly annoying anybody. Then one day the President of the United States called out a portion of the U. S. Army and a major general very bravely rode up Pennsylvania avenue at the head of the regiments and proceeded to break up this illegal and unlawful condition created by the bonus marchers. It did not matter whether the bonus marchers were right in their contention or not. The fact was that they violated the laws of this country by forming a so-called unlawful conspiracy or combination and occupied property that did not belong to them. Of course, there were no votes nor large amounts of money for campaign purposes to be gotten out of the bonus marchers, so naturally they should be disposed of in such a manner.

The point will be reached before long when the people that represent the large majorities which do not belong to either the powerful capitalistic group nor the powerful labor union groups will resent the unlawfulness and undemocratic manner which these two groups have taken. It is hoped that conditions will return to the time when monopolies and large money interests can be held in check by law and when these labor organizations can be controlled and their leaders deported and the organizing of these labor organizations made unprofitable. CASEY HENRY.
Washington, March 26.

Fixed Incomes And Prices.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Labor as a whole is today receiving in wages more money from industry than it has ever received before. Farmers also are receiving more money than they have ever received. But what about the millions of people who have not been able to increase their incomes, salaries or wages?

Groceries that cost them a year ago $34.13 now cost them $38.87, and 35 other commodities which a family has to buy and which cost a year ago $37.08 now cost $48.26. Clothes and other textile materials which cost them a year ago $15.61 now cost them $20.90.

This increase in the cost of things a family has to buy is the result of higher taxes (both direct and visible and indirect and invisible) collected by the Federal Government, higher wages paid to well-organized labor groups and benefit payments made to farmers by the Federal Government from the tax money which constitutes a part of the purchase price of everything a family has to buy.

This Administration has helped organized laborers to force higher wages from their employers and it has made benefit payments to farmers, but what has it done except harm to the millions of people who are living on fixed incomes, salaries or wages which they cannot increase? The answer is, just exactly nothing. CANUTE.
Washington, March 28.

D. C. Personal Tax.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our ancestors, more courageous than the spineless people of the present, staged a real "show" when they dumped the British tea into Boston Harbor, to protest against taxation where there was no representation.

Hasn't the time arrived for the long-suffering, voteless citizen of Washington to protest against the abominable so-called "D. C. personal tax?"

Under the "abundant life" promised by President Roosevelt, income taxes have risen, bank interest cut to virtually nothing, while the guardians of the law are feverishly snooping about in the attempt to ascertain how much money, jewelry, stocks and bonds Mr. and Mrs. Voteless Citizen had in their possession on July 1.

Bonds in default, or stocks not on a dividend basis must be included in local report and year in and year out an exorbitant payment of half of 1 per cent is required.

A sit-down strike for local taxpayers might arouse Congress from its lethargy long enough to abolish the tax in question and substitute in its place a law that can be enforced and one that has an element of justice. E. K. G.
Washington, March 30.

Astronomical Deviations.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: To anyone familiar with astronomy, it is irritating to encounter the errors frequently made when astronomical phenomena are referred to in the news or editorial columns. For example, in The Post of March 29 there is a news item of an Easter service of the Ninth Street Christian Church timed "with the exact moment of sunrise, 5:51 a. m." Sunrise actually occurred at 5:59 a. m. on Easter Sunday this year, eight minutes later than the time stated.

In the editorial in the same issue, captioned "Spring Has Been Here," it is stated "officially it crept in . . . eight days ago." This reflects the popular belief that the vernal equinox always falls on March 21. Actually, it occurred this year on March 20 at 7:45 p. m.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Representative Bates, of Massachusetts, did yeoman service in fighting the race track bill. I understand that he is to resign from the District Committee. Whether this action is voluntary or involuntary I do not know, but in any event our committee feels that it would be unfortunate. Mr. Bates is too good a man to lose.

Aw, Get The Hook!

WHERE the wary fishhawk hovers you may drop a hopeful line. This gives significance to the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Osprey have returned from their winter's sojourn in the South and are now occupying their summer home (on the Potomac, the Patuxent, or wherever it is your happy chance to meet them yearly).

That they were in the South is merely a guess of mine. I was talking to a robin this morning and he hadn't seen them there. But that doesn't mean a thing. He is a very nice robin, but a trifle self-centered. He prefers to talk about worms. He thinks this is going to be a good season for worms and he is rather glad our fishermen prefer crabmeat for bait. Take it all in all, he chirped, he has much to be thankful for.

So one can't be sure where the Ospreys spent the winter. The only thing I'm certain of is that if they were in the West they didn't stop at Reno. The pair will remain wedded till death parts them. And then, beyond question, the survivor, being captain of his (or her) soul, will straightway take a second mate.

• • • •

But, indeed, I don't know why the fishhawks leave our tidewater country at all. It can't be the climate. They live and breed all around the world, and from the poles to the equator; on rocky crags (as in Scotland), in dense forests (as in Finland), and on the housetops (as in Mexico); in cold countries and in hot countries; everywhere on the globe, in fact, except New Zealand and Iceland; and I shall be obliged if you will tell me why they boycott these two countries.

I think it must be a matter of diet; that they are not only great fish eaters, but gourmets, a little pernicketty about the kind of fish they want to eat. I came to that conclusion this morning, when I saw a fishhawk conversing with a loon midstream.

"Hello!" said the loon. "So you're back again. And I must be leaving. The perch and the bream are disappearing and the carp have moved into the creek maternity wards. But the oysters were good all winter. You should have been here."

"Oh, as to that," said the osprey, "I never did care much for perch or bream, and oysters are an acquired taste. Perhaps if I could open them the way you do I'd love them."

"Aw, shucks!" said the loon with a laugh. "It's just as easy. All you've got to do is to wait until the oyster gets ready to yawn. Then you present your bill and evict her. A raccoon does the same thing with his claws."

I didn't really hear this conversation. I got it second-hand from a killdeer. That is to say, a little bird told me.

• • • •

Reasonable, isn't it? Food assuredly determines a lot of their habits. In Finland where it is plentiful the nests are close together, two or three hundred of them. In Scotland, in spots where food is scarce, a couple will live on a crag and drive all other ospreys away. That's their beat and they want no intruders.

And right here in Maryland and Virginia it really looks as though each pair had exclusive rights to a certain amount of territory. It seems to me that I've been watching the same couple for years. They make a fine appearance. Their comparatively small bodies and huge wings give them an easy grace in the air that delights the eye. When you see a bird poised for a moment just before he drops like a stone you know instinctively that it's all up with the fish he falls for. Under water he goes, then out again almost at once with the fish in his talons. Then off to the nest with his market basket.

I've never seen a fishhawk's egg. It's a pretty sight I'd make climbing a blasted oak; and a little less pretty when the hawk got after me. We'd both have a perfectly ripping time, but I'd prefer an adversary not quite so ready with her talons. That bird knows how many eggs make three, the number she lays, and she won't have them tampered with.

• • • •

Other people seem to have the same idea and so it comes about that I have never met anybody who has seen an osprey's egg, and when it comes to a description I have to take the word of a perfect stranger. Two perfect strangers. The Rev. J. G. Woods in "Our Living World" says, "The eggs are largely blotched with reddish brown, the dark patches being collected near the large end of the egg."

Not a very attractive picture; but listen to this description by Alfred Newton, a Cambridge professor: "Few birds lay eggs so beautiful or so rich in color; their white or pale ground is spotted, blotched or marbled with almost every shade of purple, orange and red, passing from the most delicate lilac, buff and peach blossom through violets, chestnut and crimson to a nearly absolute black."

And so, with due regard to the Easter season, I think we had better get our eggs from the professor.

• • • •

My point is that the ospreys have really arrived, and that we may presently go fishing.

Oratory A Disease.

I AM OPPOSED to oratory, because it is a phony method of expression which can be mastered by any stagestruck flannelmouth with plenty of gall and employed to overpower the people's sense through emotional excitement.

If a man has something to say to a gathering and has confidence in the wisdom of his remarks, there is no need for him to shake his mane, wave his arms and do tricks with his voice. He should get up, state his position calmly and leave the decision to the intelligence of his audience.

The moment a speaker departs from sober, normal conduct and goes into his act I remind myself that this is where he doesn't trust his stuff and hopes to substitute showmanship and sound effects for argument.

Oratory is a sort of disease, for once a man has found the sound of his voice in public address he wants to clear his throat and say, "Ladies and gentlemen," whenever he finds himself in proximity to an American flag, a kitchen table and a water pitcher. Orators are the worst liars and hypocrites in the world, but only when they are on their feet before an audience.

• • • •

AT SUCH TIMES they are in a sort of trance and unable to control themselves. When they step down they get normal again, not necessarily honest, but no worse than other people.

However, it stands to reason that if a man will spend hours making faces at himself in the mirror in the privacy of his room, shaking his fists at himself and braying at the four walls to dress up the effect of his remarks, he does not have much faith in his own words.

He admits to himself that it is necessary to trim them with gymnastics and vocal mayonnaise to kill the rancid taste of his logic.

Not only politicians and labor leaders do this but preachers, too, and not only that, but some preachers are so utterly phony that they will buy sermons from a wholesale house. But orators of all kinds have a few stock speeches which they repeat over and over, provided they are not on the air.

The radio has killed repetition, for the boys in the Owl Lunch can spot a repeater after a few words.

A whole school of bush-league imitators took notes on the canned sermons of the late Billy Sunday, changed them around slightly for purposes of disguise and went around the country on the kerosene circuit howling at the devil to come on up and fight like a man. Bill had a good act, but I didn't like him because he used to leave dime tips for a poor little waitress in the Tampa Bay Hotel when he was doing a big business at his store down the street and bawling out people for dropping dimes in the collection.

THERE WAS a great phony in the revival business who turned Chicago upside down years ago with the force and fire of his sermons, of which he produced two a day every day for several weeks. One he orated from his high pitch in the tabernacle. The other was printed in the paper under heads set in Biblical type. And do you know who wrote them? My old man wrote the sermons, two a day, and covered murders on the side.

That was how come I said in a piece a few weeks ago that my old man was a famous retired evangelist—just for a kid. Do you know what came of that? Well, my old man was down South catching the sun at the time, and the next afternoon two reverends came around to his hotel and invited him to swing out into space as guest parson come Sunday.

But my old man doesn't know how to wave his arms and pop his eyes and howl and sweat as the revivalist did. He would have had to do it in straight-face, like Lincoln at Gettysburg. I don't think the stuff was as good intrinsically as the Gettysburg address, because I remember that at the time of writing my old man used to complain that he ought to be getting at least 30 per cent of the gate.

We didn't have much sugar in the bowl at our house, but the parson grabbed all the dough.

The Philippine Dilemma

Self-Rule Hampered By Continued American Control.

By Raymond Leslie Buell.

Special Correspondence of The Post.

This is the first of three articles on the political, economic and military problems facing the Philippine Commonwealth. The author is president of the Foreign Policy Association.

CONVERSATIONS now taking place between President Manuel Quezon and Assistant Secretary of State Francis B. Sayre may hasten independence for the Philippines and materially affect the Far Eastern policy of the United States. Under the Tydings-McDuffie law of March, 1934, the Philippines were to receive their independence in 1946. But President Quezon now suggests that the date of independence be advanced to 1938 or 1939. No doubt he believes that the Philippine Republic will receive better terms in regard to trade from the Roosevelt Administration than from its successor.

Nevertheless, complete independence for the Philippines involves grave economic and political risks which responsible statesmen ordinarily would wish to postpone. What are the reasons why President Quezon should now adopt a contrary policy and request independence eight years before the date fixed by Congress?

Perhaps the outstanding reason for this change is the political uncertainty which now exists in the islands. In accordance with the Tydings-McDuffie act, the Philippines have drawn up their own constitution and elected Mr. Quezon as President. Until 1946 the islands are to be a "Commonwealth" which is presumably self-governing. Nevertheless, this Commonwealth is under the sovereignty of the United States and a large number of its powers are subject to veto from Washington.

Islands Still Tied To The United States.

THUS, Philippine officials must recognize the "supreme authority" of the United States. The foreign affairs of the Commonwealth are placed under the "direct supervision and control" of Washington. During the Commonwealth period the American Government may appropriate property for public use, maintain its armed forces in the islands, and call to the military service of the United States the armed forces of the Philippines.

The American Supreme Court retains jurisdiction over Philippine courts, and the President of the United States has the veto over any amendment to the Philippine constitution. Similarly, the President may suspend the operation of any law or order of the Philippine government which will result in a failure of that government to meet its contracts or financial obligations, or violate international obligations of the United States.

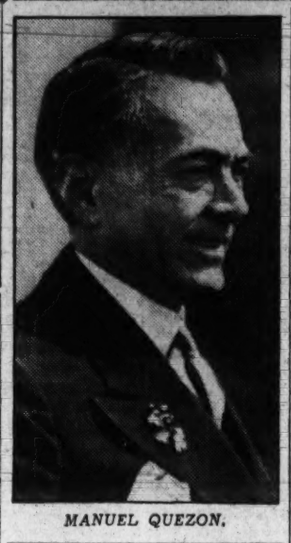
The President may also direct the High Commissioner to seize the Philippine customs offices if the government of the Commonwealth fails to pay any of its debts or fulfill any of its contracts.

The most sweeping right which the President may exercise is "to intervene for the preservation of the government of the Commonwealth of the Philippine Islands and for the maintenance of the government as provided in the constitution thereof, and for the protection of life, property and individual liberty, and for the discharge of government obligations under and in accordance with the provisions of the constitution." This right is even greater than that which was granted to the United States under the famous Platt Amendment with Cuba.

Despite the Platt Amendment, Cuba was an independent republic and legally it had the right to challenge the interpretation made of that amendment by the United States. In contrast, America has not recognized the independence of the Philippines and the powers of the Commonwealth rest not upon treaty but upon a unilateral statute of the American Congress, which legally may be interpreted as the United States sees fit.

The place of the old Governor General of the Philippines is now occupied by a High Commissioner appointed by the President of the United States. He must be "recognized" as representative of the President; he has access to any government records, and shall perform any duties delegated to him by the President under provisions of the independence act.

The interpretation, therefore, of the vast powers which the United States retains in the Philippines will be in the hands of the High Commissioner, subject to approval of the President. If the High Commissioner interprets his powers widely, they will be little different from those previously exercised by the Governor General. But from the political standpoint President Quezon cannot acquiesce in demands which would destroy the autonomy of the Philippine Commonwealth.



MANUEL QUEZON.

Role Of American High Commissioner Important.

WHETHER or not serious disputes arise between the Commonwealth and the United States will depend not only upon the views of the President, but upon the tact, sympathy and personality of the American High Commissioner. The first High Commissioner, Gov. Murphy, exhibited these qualities to a marked degree. Nevertheless, even in this case, differences arose with President Quezon over the extent of the High Commissioner's powers. President Roosevelt has now seen fit to name as High Commissioner Mr. Paul McNutt.

Gov. McNutt may have certain commendable qualities, but his appointment has not been received with enthusiasm in many circles in the Philippines or in the United States. He has been accused of being a militarist; and while Governor of Indiana he was accused of resorting to semi-Fascist methods of administration. It is obvious that if the Governor goes to the Philippines determined to be a pro-consul whose purpose is to maintain his own personal position and the dignity of the United States, serious difficulties may arise. Let us hope that the Governor will soon dispel any misgivings as to his appointment.

Nevertheless, it is natural for the Philippines to resent the selection of a High Commissioner who has authority to veto almost any important act of the Philippine Commonwealth, particularly when that Commissioner has no experience in Philippine affairs and when he may look upon his position purely as a political stepping stone.

The fact that the Philippine Commonwealth is inevitably at the mercy of changing High Commissioners explains in part the desire to hasten the advent of complete independence. One means of reducing this source of friction, until independence is granted, is for the President, after a consultation with President Quezon, to issue detailed instructions to the High Commissioner restricting his intervention to a limited and clearly defined sphere.

Defense Question Raises Big Issues.

A SECOND political difficulty in the present situation is the conflict which may arise between the High Commissioner and the military adviser to the Philippine Commonwealth, Gen. MacArthur.

Wholly apart from the question of defense policy, which will be discussed in a later article, there are obvious dangers arising out of the presence in the Philippines of a high-ranking general in the American Army, responsible only to President Quezon. Both the High Commissioner and Gen. MacArthur may give contradictory advice to the Commonwealth government. If Gov. McNutt shares the military ideas of Gen. MacArthur no conflict may in fact arise. But from the standpoint of sound administration and unified responsibility, Gen. MacArthur should be responsible to the office of the High Commissioner.

If this solution is not practicable, then Gen. MacArthur should at least resign his position in the American Army or go on the retired list, thus making it clear that he is acting only in a private capacity.

Finally, great political uncertainty exists in the Philippines because the Commonwealth government remains at the mercy of the American Congress. Had the United States made a treaty with the Philippines, in effect recognizing the sovereignty of the islands, subject to a temporary American protectorate, Congress could not enact legislation infringing upon the terms of such a treaty without violating international law. But since the government of the Philippines does not rest upon treaty but upon act of Congress, the latter body may at any time undermine the foundations of the Philippine Commonwealth.

Congress has already enacted legislation which constitutes a departure from the economic regime established by the Tydings-McDuffie act of 1934. Thus, Congress imposed a processing tax of 3 cents a pound on cocoanut oil made from Philippine copra, although no such restriction was embodied in the independence law.

President Roosevelt denounced this tax as "directly contrary to the intent" of the independence act, but he had to approve it, since it formed part of the revenue law. In 1935 Congress also imposed an absolute import limit on cordage from the Philippines in place of the tariff quota under the Tydings-McDuffie act.

It has done the same thing in the case of sugar. The possibility of such changes by Congress, whose acts are at times dominated by special interest lobbies rather than by a sense of obligation, contributes to a continuous state of uncertainty and increases the desire of many Filipinos for immediate independence.

Foreign Policy Still In American Hands.

WHILE SUCH independence will constitute a solution of these political problems, it cannot be achieved without a period of negotiation. But these political difficulties can be reduced if the President would instruct the High Commissioner to intervene only in a limited number of internal matters and if the United States should at once allow the Philippine Commonwealth to make certain types of treaties and be represented at international conferences held under such bodies as the International Labor Office or the League of Nations.

Although the Tydings-McDuffie act implies that the Philippine Commonwealth can conduct its own foreign policy subject to the supervision of the United States, so far the Philippine Commonwealth has no greater freedom in this respect than when it was a territory. If the purpose of the transitional period is to give the Commonwealth experience in international affairs, such experience should begin at once, subject, of course, to State Department supervision. In this connection, the Philippine Commonwealth should be authorized to assign Filipinos to certain American embassies in order to lay the groundwork for a diplomatic service.

Some critics assert that President Quezon is failing to solve the social problems of the island and that he is militarizing the country in preparation for a personal dictatorship. Such criticisms are undoubtedly exaggerated and they are relevant only in the sense that the American Government naturally wishes the Commonwealth to adopt a long-range scheme of planning which will give some assurance that the islands will weather the future.

It is also natural that the United States should desire that the economic concessions which it makes the Philippines should not be consumed in armament or a socially unbalanced economy.

NEVERTHELESS, it is well to remember that if the Philippines still have social problems, despite 35 years of American rule, one can hardly blame President Quezon for not solving these problems during the first years of office. Moreover, it is inevitable that a time when pacifist Sweden, Switzerland and Belgium are increasing their armaments, the Philippine government, confronted by an aggressive Japan, should concern itself with national defense.

If the United States assists the Philippines in a solution of economic problems, there is every reason to believe that the islands will succeed in ruling themselves as well as many countries in Latin-America or in Europe. The fear that a dictatorship will arise in the Philippines certainly does not justify a perpetuation of American rule. The one danger in the situation for the United States at present arises out of the fact that we remain responsible to the outside world for the acts of the Philippine Commonwealth.

If we veto their acts, we become involved in serious difficulties with the islands, but if we acquiesce in acts which may be questionable under Western standards or violate international law, we may become involved with other great powers.

The present half-way house on the road to independence thus involves dangers both to the Philippines and the United States. These dangers may be reduced by immediately curtailing the powers of the High Commissioner to the Philippines, but they can be removed only by complete independence.

Mollisons to Race Each Other Over Sea

New York, March 31 (AP).—The flying Mollisons, who are soon to be jousting in the British divorce courts, will race against each other from New York to Paris next August, Amy Mollison said on her arrival here today from England.

Mrs. Mollison (or Miss Johnson as she prefers it), said she came to the United States "so I will not be there when the papers are filed" in her suit for divorce from Capt. James Mollison. She said she and Mollison both would participate in the ocean derby arranged by the French air ministry to commemorate the Lindbergh flight.

Child Labor Amendment Voted by Conn. House

Hartford, Conn., March 31 (AP).—The Connecticut Senate approved, 17 to 16, today the proposal, already rejected by the House, that the State ratify the proposed child labor amendment to the Federal Constitution.

In the face of the 2-to-1 defeat suffered by the proposed amendment in the House recently, however, the Senate victory was generally regarded as a moral one. Leaders of both sides agreed there was virtually no hope that the House would reverse its stand.

Britain Ends Year in Red.

London, March 31 (AP).—Great Britain ended the 1936-37 fiscal year tonight with a deficit of £5,597,000 (approximately $27,985,000), treasury returns disclosed.

The Little Entente Meets Again.

AGAIN AND AGAIN, during recent years, the demise of the Little Entente has been predicted. Only the other day a Magyar publication, Danubian Review, suggested that for all practical purposes the Czechoslovak-Yugoslav-Rumanian combination has ceased to exist.

If so, the corpse appears to be a very likely one. Indeed at Belgrade today, where the statesmen of the three nations are holding another of their regular conferences, the basic presumption is that the Little Entente is in no sense a corpse at all. This is shown by the circumstance that one of the subjects on the agenda is the possible enlargement of the military ties binding the bloc. Czechoslovakia, sponsor of the plan, would supplement the existing bilateral military alliances between the three nations by a tripartite alliance so that when one nation is attacked by any outside power the other two would come to that nation's assistance.

TO BE SURE it is very doubtful if this proposal will make much headway at Belgrade. Czechoslovakia is in a position to argue that since the three nations are already allied to France the course of action now suggested is the logical one. Moreover the Little Entente states are also bound by the obligations expressed in the League Covenant. At the same time the need of regional security system has grown because of the severe blows struck during recent months at the collective security system.

Yet the Little Entente nations do not feel themselves equally menaced by the developing Europan situation. Czchoslovakia happens to be greatly worried by the possibility of a German attack on its territory. It would feel a lot more secure if, in the event of such an attack, it could depend not only on France and Russia but also on Yugoslavia and Rumania. No doubt in return for such a promise of assistance the Prague government would agree to aid Yugoslavia against a possible Italian attack and Rumania against an aggressive assault by any hostile power.

AS IT HAPPENS, however, Rumana is no longer as fearful as it once was of Russian attempt to regain Bessarabia. Since 1935, when a Russo-Rumnian modus vivendi was effected, Rumania's possession of Bessarabia has been given de facto recognition by the Moscow government.

Yugoslava's fears of Italy have also tended to abate. From the vewponts of the governments at Bucharest and Belgrade, therefore, any extension of the military clauses of the Little Entente treaties would constitute a liability rather than an asset. These two powers have, at the moment, much less to fear from their great power neighbors than has Czechoslovakia.

Up to now their common concern has been, first of all to prevent any modification of the Treaty of Trianon by which the present boundares of Hungary were fixed; secondly, to prevent a restoration of the Hapsburgs; and thirdly, (this particularly concerns Yugoslavia and Hungary) to keep Bulgaria in check.

WITH RESPECT to all three of these aims the Little Entente's position today is stronger than it has been for some time.

Not many weeks ago Bulgaria and Yugoslavia decided to bury the hatchet. From the viewpoint of Yugoslavia this was an unmixed good. It allayed chronic tensions between two Slavic nations that have much in common and made certain that Bulgaria would join no combination directed against its western neighbor. More recently Mussolini, through a journalistic spokesman, Virginio Gayda, made it clear that Italy had no use for a Hapsburg restoration at the present juncture. Said he:

Italy's policy in regard to Austria is built on the principle of the independence and territorial integrity of this Danubian State. This policy is laid down both in the Rome protocols and in the agreement of July 11, 1936. All that Italy does in regard to Austria is inspired by these principles, and the question of restoration must be treated from this same angle. We emphasize that a restoration in Austria can bring nothing but dangers.

It is no secret that the Schuschnigg regime favors such a restoration and has looked hopefully to Italy to make it possible. Mussolini's veto has, therefore, been a real disappointment to Vienna and has tended to cool the hitherto cordial relations between Austria and Italy. A distinct tendency is now being manifested in Vienna to seek independence both from Italy and Germany.

THE THIRD recent development at which the Little Entente can rejoice is in the conclusion of a comprehensive pact between Italy and Yugoslavia.

In his Milan speech of November 1, 1936, Mussolini fluttered Little Entente dovecotes by his extremely cordial references to Hunary. More warmly than ever, it appeared, had the Duce come out in favor of revision of the peace treaties. Despite friendly gesture to Yugoslavia, which Mussolini also made in that speech, the reactions in Belgrade were hostile as they also were in Bucharest and Prague.

Now, however, Italy has signed a five-year non-aggression pact with Yugoslavia. Both nations have pledged themselves to join no combination directed against the other. They have also agreed to seek the expansion of their mutual trade.

If this agreement has any meaning at all it means that Mussolini in his desire to safeguard Italy's flank at the present critical time has no desire to aid Hungarian revisionism in any effective fashion. It also means that Yugoslavia, which more and more has been slipping into Germany's commercial orbit, although not without qualms, now intends to cultivate Italy as a more valuable customer. This is a further indication that the Berlin-Rome combination is not working any too well.

In any case, the Little Entente today can be well satisfied with the present situation. It has much less to fear from Magyar revisionist efforts when these are unsupported by Italy than when they are. It has found an ally against the Hapsburgs in Mussolini. And Bulgaria is definitely quiescent. Indeed this lessening of tensions along the Danube, the Adriatic and the Yugoslav-Bulgarian border might tend to weaken the Little Entente were it not for the circumstances that no nation can at present be sure that an agreement made one day will not be broken the next. As long as the Magyar threat remains the Little Entente will continue to exist and function.

April

By William Lyon Phelps.

A Girl's Name.

I hope that some woman who reads this article will name her next girl-child April. It is the most beautiful name of all the twelve months, and as girls are often named May and June, why not April? March is a good name for a boy (all healthy boys are savages) and April for a woman.

Robert Frost called one of his loveliest imaginary poetically conceived girls Maple, and why not? The Russians call white birches the brides of the forest.

Shakespeare hated cold weather; he hated cloudy and rainy weather; he loved warm air and cloudless skies. This is the only respect in which I truly resemble William Shakespeare.

• • • •

Shakespeare loved April because it was the harbinger of Spring, and the sod (in Emerson's phrase) turned into violets. Shakespeare saluted this month as "proud-pied April, dressed in all his trim"—I wonder he did not say "her" instead of "his."

He spoke of a woman, recalling "the lovely April of her prime." It is interesting that in all the 37 plays he mentions April 12 times, and in the one thin volume of his Sonnets six times. The Sonnets are more personal and he talks there a great deal about the weather, which was constantly in his mind.

• • • •

I can hear at this moment distinctly the husky contralto voice of Ethel Barrymore when in the play, 'Declassee," she kept quoting Browning's famous lines:

"Oh, to be in England
Now that April's there!"

And if the English would only heat their houses properly, I should not mind being there myself. But the only central heating they understand is tea-drinking.

Fighting Planes Set to Defend Capital From Enemy Air Attack

Army Gradually Building Up Corps to Ultimate Goal of 2,320 Craft; Distance Protects Nation From Hasty Assault.

War clouds darken the horizon as Europe engages in a $15,000,000,000 arms race. What is America doing to protect herself as the twentieth anniversary of her entry into the World War approaches? This is the fourth of a series of articles designed to answer that question.

By Edward T. Folliard.

If Washington were threatened tomorrow by a hostile air force, a command from Gen. Malin Craig, chief of staff, would bring 450 fighting planes winging to the city's defense.

Later on, it ought to be possible to say that 1,000 or 1,500 could be mobilized for that purpose. But right now, the Army Air Corps, like other of the Nation's fighting units, is going through a process of rejuvenation. Not so long ago, 65 per cent of its planes were obsolete or obsolescent. Congress, with an eye on the ominous war drift abroad, now has set out to correct that situation.

FOLLIARD.

Five hundred new planes were acquired by the Army Air Corps last year and more than that will be delivered this year. The immediate goal is 1,800 fighting ships of the air; the ultimate goal, 2,320. Whether that will remain the ultimate will depend on "contingencies."

Russia is said to have an air fleet of 6,600 planes. Great Britain is rapidly expanding her fleet, and it is expected to grow to more than 5,000 planes. Germany, France and Italy are likewise in the frenzied aircraft race. In the Pacific, Japan is credited wiht 2,191 fighting planes.

Reading about the great air armadas of other countries, pondering the horrors brought about by bombings in Spain, the average American is likely to feel some concern as he measures our own air fleet against those abroad.

The point for him to remember, however, is that the American air force is for defense, not aggression.

Now just how much danger is there of an attack on America from the air? What are the chances of an enemy air fleet getting over here and bombing our cities, leaving havoc and terror behind?

The official answer of America's high military authorities is, "Not much chance." That is their answer as of today. They reserve the right to change it at any time in the future.

Distance Is Factor.

The truth is that when Wilbur and Orville Wright lifted their flying machine into the air from the sands of Kitty Hawk, N. C., on December 17, 1903, they gave the United States a tremendous advantage in the arena of war. The airplane strengthens America's defense.

It bolls down to a question of distance.

Countries bordering on each other, or close to each other, have good reason to dread the airplane. A generation ago, England thought she was comparatively safe. Her Navy was expected to hold off any would-be invader. But today, as Prime Minister Baldwin has said, England's frontier is not the channel, but the Rhine.

German planes, carrying bombs and poisons, could reach London in a few hours. That is why every resident of England today is being provided with a gas mask and taught to dive for shelter when the sirens scream. That is why Great Britain is launched on the greatest aircraft program in her history.

Thus far American civilians have never been called on to drill with gas masks. This is not because of any idealistic trust in other nations. It gets back to the question of distance.

Disadvantages Stressed.

In 1933, a committee of high-ranking Army officers, including the chief of the Air Corps, went into a huddle and sought to determine what might be expected from the skies in the event America went to war. Here, briefly, are that committee's conclusions:

Air forces must have a base, either on the land or on aircraft carriers at sea. It is estimated that 16 men are needed on the ground for every plane in the fighting force. These men load the tanks with gasoline, service the motors, bring up the bombs and perform other duties.

To obtain land bases, an enemy would have either:

1. To seize a suitable harbor on our coast, land his forces, conquer the necessary terrain, and then set up a base for an air force; or

2. Establish such a base near the American border.

To begin with, the enemy would have to overcome the American harbor defenses. Then he would have to face the fire of a mobile force of the American Army, plus a strafing from American war planes, before his own planes could be used.

Would Disclose Plans.

"During such operations," the Army generals continued, "the only aircraft available to the enemy would be his fleet-borne aviation, and our own air force could concentrate superior forces to interrupt that development."

(The enemy aircraft carriers would, of course, also have our Navy to deal with.)

"Proposals," said the generals, "are sometimes advanced to the effect that: (1) Land-based bombing airplanes of foreign nations can cross the Atlantic or Pacific, rendezvous at some selected point, deliver a concentrated attack on some vital objective, and then return to home bases. (2) Or with land or floating bases established en route and in territory contiguous to our Nation, an air force superior to our own could launch a decisive attack against some vital area in the United States.

"These proposals cannot be accepted as a possibility under the present stage of air development. Preparation of adequate bases (near our borders) in peace would be convincing evidence of an intent to attack and would disclose an enemy's proposed plan of operations."

Difficulty Cited.

The Army strategists pointed to Gen. Italo Balbo's flight of 24 Italian seaplanes in 1933 as evidence of the great difficulty that faces an air armada detailed to bomb America.

"For this flight," said the general staff group, "eight air bases in foreign countries were established, with 11 surface vessels as agents thereof. The weather services of four nations were utilized. Advance preparations were started in May; the flight was ready in early June, but could not start until July 1.

"Thirty-three days were consumed between the time of readiness for departure and arrival at destination, 6,063 miles distant, covered in 46 hours of flying in 15 days from start to arrival.

"The foregoing indicates the vital importance of bases in all air operations; and, under present air development, shows the unsoundness and fallacy of claims to the effect that the United States is exposed to serious air attacks from land-based air forces which would prove critical to our national defense."

Importance Stressed.

The generals did not seek to belittle the importance of aircraft in the American defense set-up. On the contrary, they exulted because "aviation greatly has increased the difficulties of overseas invasion." They pointed out that Air Corps fliers can be used for long-range reconnaisance off shore to detect the approach of hostile expeditions and also can be used to bomb such expeditions.

It is to maintain a strong defense force that the War Department is now asking Congress to gradually enlarge the Air Corps until it has its authorized 2,300 planes. In time of war, the planes will have to be available. No enemy is going to be so obliging as to wait until this country builds them. Neither is he going to wait while we train pilots and crews.

Just as important as planes are bases. The newest one projected by the War Department is for Tacoma, Wash., long regarded as a weak spot in the national defense picture. From this "Northwest Base," as it will be called, American planes would guard against a hostile air force coming over the Aleutian Islands. From here, too, the American fliers could range out to harass an enemy fleet of warships.

Efficiency Now High.

The efficiency of the Air Corps is considered higher today than ever before, thanks largely to the establishment of its own G. H. Q., which cuts out a lot of red tape and makes possible a much faster mobilization of fighting planes.

The story of aviation in the United States, the country of its birth, is an absorbing one, some of its chapters distressing, other glorious.

The Wright brothers first offered their invention, with patent rights, to the War Department. They got a perfunctory reply from the Board of Ordnance and Fortification, a reply so cool that the brothers did not bother to press the matter further.

Meantime, Europe was very much interested, and in 1908 the Wrights went over there. They were enthusiastically welcomed in France and Germany, whose military and industrial leaders took no such skeptical view of their "flying machine" as was held over here.

It was this interest in Europe that finally led the War Department to open serious negotiations with the Wrights. Theodore Roosevelt,

Nazis to Change Conceptions of Property Right

Will Differ Radically From Orthodox Ideas, Says Official.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, March 31.—The Nazi government is preparing to give to the German people a new conception of property rights, differing radically from the ideas of orthodox capitalism, a high official disclosed tonight.

New civil laws are in process of codification, said this official, and in them "there will be no need and no room" for "abstract rights of property"—especially with respect to land.

Roland Freisler, state secretary in the ministry of justice, made these disclosures in an article in a law magazine, German Common and Economic Law."

This legal authority predicated new conceptions would govern inheritance. Under new laws such passage of property will be governed by considerations of proximity, which may be either of blood relationship or of occupational relationship.

Would Aid Workers.

Thus a distant relative would have less chance of inheriting industrial property than a worker who had helped the original owner develop it.

The changes in prospect, Freisler explained, do not mean that the entire civil law is being overhauled with special emphasis on property rights. They merely will be a gradual application of new conceptions of workers' rights, peasants' rights and rights of other classes.

The new laws, wrote Freisler, in many respects already are in full operation, as exemplified by the hereditary farm laws, labor laws and racial laws which place Jews on a different status from other Germans with regard to property rights.

The German people gradually are being prepared for acceptance of the Nazis principles of property.

The writer pointed out that the Nazi system of hereditary farm is establishing a new conception of the relationship of the farmer to the land he tills, just as the racial laws established a new conception of citizenship, excluding Jews from full participation.

Help for Peasants.

In the same way new laws are establishing a modern relationship between workers and their factories, between workers and their dwellings and also between the whole people and such property as mineral resources, rivers and canals. Some of these changes remain to be legislated, the writer said.

Freisler explained the Nazi government had no intention of interfering with the rights o farmers to possess their land but aimed rather "to guarantee the peasantry its status within the state."

He asserted that the old conception of the rights of parents over their children will be supplanted by a new conception of parental responsibility.

The latest film made by Emil Jennings, motion picture star, has a theme based on the Nazi conceptions of property. Titled "The Autocrat," it pictures a captain of industry who concludes the steelworks he has created must be inherited not by his relatives but by his fellow workers.

This film, satirizing the old conceptions of family inheritance, has received official commendation as an expression of the spirit of the new Germany.

Discusses Varied Topics With Lord Tweedsmuir During Ride.

Lee House, and attending a luncheon in his and Lady Tweedsmuir's honor, given by Secretary of State and Mrs. Cordell Hull, at Sulgrave Club. Then the visitors boarded the Presidential yacht, the Potomac, at Alexandria, for the ride to Mount Vernon.

Leaving the White House shortly before 4 p. m., President and Mrs. Roosevelt motored to the Washington estate and there greeted the distinguished visitors at the dock. They proceeded to the Washingtons' tomb, where the Governor General placed a wreath, and the visitors, with Mrs. Roosevelt, then inspected the estate home while the President sat in his car and chatted with Col. H. H. Dodge, superintendent of the estate.

Hundreds of Easter visitors to the Capital, with hundreds of cameras, were at Mount Vernon and greeted the official party with applause and eager camera clicking.

On the return trip, Mrs. Roosevelt rode with Lady Tweedsmuir and other ladies of the party, leaving the President and the Governor General together in the leading car with an opportunity to discuss freely matters uppermost in their minds. The conversations were interrupted by arrival at the White House and preparations for the formal dinner and later reception in honor of the Canadian visitors.

Following the reception, Mr. Roosevelt and His Lordship planned, it was understood, to get together again for a resumption of their talks, which promised to continue far into the night.

This morning the Governor General and Lady Tweedsmuir will motor to Annapolis for a visit to the Naval Academy. Returning here, His Lordship will be guest of the British Ambassador at a luncheon at the British Embassy, while Lady Tweedsmuir and Mrs. Roosevelt are guests of Secretary of Labor Frances Perkins at luncheon.

Last NRA Worker For Government Gets Final Check

She closed a borrowed desk in the Department of Commerce, where the President's report on NRA's effects was prepared.

"I'm going South for a two-week rest," the petite, prematurely gray young women announced. "Then back here to look for another job."

She joined the NRA staff in September, 1933, two months after it started. After the Supreme Court ruled out the recovery act, the staff of 5,300 employes dwindled rapidly.

But Miss Rogovin stayed on until yesterday to help the committe on industrial analysis to prepare a history and analysis of NRA, and to clean up other loose ends.

Village Refuses 'Short, Squatty' New Postoffice

Le Roy, N. Y., March 31 (AP).—Claiming it is "short and squatty," villagers here have refused to accept a $97,000 newly completed postoffice building, Postmaster John Gleason revealed today.

The new building has been under construction for a year, and was to have been dedicated and opened Saturday. It is an architectural duplicate of the famed Radcliffe Memorial Library at Oxford University.

Gleason said he had been ordered by Federal officials to cancel all dedication plans and not move into the building.

"Perhaps it will be remodeled," he said.

then in the White House, was enthusiastic.

Selfridge Killed in Crash.

The sum of $25,000 was made available, but even though the Wrights had the only practicable airplane in the world, the law required that there be competitive bidding. The result was that all the embryo inventors in the country entered the competition.

The "Wright Flyer," as it was called by the inventors, was delivered at Fort Myer, across the Potomac, on August 20, 1908. This one cracked up, and Lieut. Thomas E. Selfridge, a passenger with Orville Wright, was killed, the first pioneer in motor driven aircraft to give his life. Selfridge Field is named for him. Another Wright plane was delivered in 1909, and that marked the start of what was to become the Army Air Corps.

The Army first used airplanes in serious military operations in 1916 during the hunt for Pancho Villa in Mexico. When this country entered the World War on April 6, 1917, the Army had only 55 airplanes. Fifty-one were obsolete and the other four obsolescent. In other words, they were no good.

What planes we manufactured for use on the Western Front were based on British and French designs. The program was marked by much scandal, and after the war it was shown that some of the manufacturers had indulged in vicious profiteering.

5,000 Pilots Trained.

The record of the Air Service, however, was a splendid one. At the close of the war, the number of officers, students and enlisted men had grown from 1,200 to 200,000. Five thousand pilots and observers were sent overseas. American air squadrons—45 in number—played important roles in the battles of Chateau-Thierry, St. Mihiel and the Meuse-Argonne, bringing down in combat 755 enemy planes and losing only 357.

The pilots who came back from the war to return to civil life were largely responsible for the ensuing boom in American commercial aviation. Today there is more transport flying in the United States, more passengers carried annually, than in all the rest of the world combined. There are 14,000 licensed pilots 30,000 student pilots and 7,500 licensed planes. These constitute an important reservoir in time of emergency.

Controversies Furious.

Furious controversies broke around the Air Service in the postwar years, and as the result of one of them the late Brig. Gen. "Billy" Mitchell left the Army. No less than 16 investigations of the Air Service have been conducted, the last one by a board headed by former Secretary of War Newton Baker.

The fact remains that no war has yet been "settled in the air." It is said that Gen. Franco, the Fascist leader in Spain, does not want to destroy Madrid, lest there be nothing left if he should conquer. Nevertheless, his German and Italian planes have been bombing Madrid steadily, killing women and children, but not causing the terror he must have expected.

But military and—yes, naval—men admit that the fundamentals of war have not changed much since Hannibal's day.

Woodring Praises Flier for Breaking Rules in Disaster

Langley Field, Va., March 31 (AP).—Secretary of War Harry Woodring has commended Col. Robert E. M. Goolrick, who commands the U. S. air force's third wing at Barksdale Field, La., for disregarding regulations in order to carry nurses and doctors by air to the New London Tex., school explosion scene.

Col. Goolrick reported to Major General Frank Andrews the "unauthorized use" of army aircraft made at the urgent request of Red Cross representatives at Shreveport, La.

Gen. Andrews mailed the radiogram to Secretary Woodring, saying he approved of Col. Goolrick's action as warranted by circumstances. The Secretary of War in turn commended the two officers for cutting red tape in such an emergency mission.

I think vanity is about as bad a trait as a person can have when carried to extreme.

I was at a funeral down home one time and we all felt so sorry for the young widow because she was carryin' on so, and finally the preacher says, "My heart goes out in sympathy for this young widow, who has suffered such a loss at her early age of 25 years."

The young widow stopped cryin' and looked at the preacher coldly, and said, "I beg your pardon—24!"

THE FEDERAL DIARY

Reg. U. S. Patent Office.

By Scott Hart.

Penned in Humility.

The tribulations of the Postoffice Department and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing must, indeed, be unreckonable. Just the other day they were belabored by the philatelists whose searching eyes picked out but two stars on the coat lapel of Gen. Lee when, the philatelists knew the coat lapel of the general should have borne three stars.

All through this controversy the attitude of department officials was one of quiet resignation. It is said that there is a strange sense of calm and peace that comes with a complete resignation to fate. The attitude of the department heads—who long have been bedeviled and beefed at by the stamp collectors—bears this out.

Actually, we never knew until the other day to just what extremes of anguish one can come who gets himself embroiled in a stamp controversy. Had we known it, there would have been no mention in this column of those departmental stamps a chief clerk of Interior has framed on his office wall. Asked what they were, the chief clerk gave his version; then he went out in search of further authority, came back with a different version and into this fund of contradictory information someone else added something entirely new and different.

And so we simply told of the stamps in phrases couched with a layman's humility, to which now comes a letter from T. Russell Hungerford, 1410 H street northwest, Room 318, inferring that the errors were flagrant, that we, the chief clerk and all concerned were uninformed and that violence, perhaps worthy of a resolution, has been worked on the ever-guarded and fair name of philatelly.

With the calmness and peace that comes with a complete resignation to fate, we quote the challenging letter:

The official color of the stamps you saw is vermillion. John Marshall did not appear on any of the Department issues. It is Jefferson on the 10c denomination. Each of the Departments then in existence had a separate set, in a color most representative of the Department, and the usual denominations were 1c, 2c, 3c, 6c, 10c, 12c, 15c, 24c, 30c and 90c with some veriations. The executives ran only to the 10c, while the State Department had four additional denominations—$2, $5, $10, and $20. The Navy, State, Treasury and War Departments had 7c stamps.

The colors were yellow for Agriculture, carmine for Executive, vermilion for Interior, purple for Justice, ultramarine for Navy, black of Postoffice, green for State, brown for Treasury and rose-red for War. They were printed by the Continental Bank Note Co. and the American Bank Note Co. I never heard of any being printed by the National Bank Note Co. However, the Continental was successor of the National and used some National plates, which probably had the National imprint. The stamps were first issued on July 1, 1873, and continued in use until May 1, 1879, when they were supplanted by penalty envelopes.

Earlier in the communication, our correspondent says: "To those who have been familiar with these issues for years it is surprising to find others who are not so well versed." And to this there is no rebuttal; but merely a reiteration that the tribulations of the Postoffice Department and the Bureau of Engraving and Printing must, indeed, be unreckonable.

55 Inducted Into Shrine After Parade

'Nut Band' Gives Concert; Charge Delivered by Potentate Daniels.

Almas Temple, A. A. O. N. M. S., staged an elaborate ceremonial last night at the Willard Hotel at which 55 candidates were inducted into the Mystic Shrine and five members were received into the temple by affiliation.

Preceding the ceremonial a business session was held at 5 p. m. in the clubhouse, 1315 K street northwest, after which there was a parade to the hotel led by officers of the Divan, followed by the Legion of Honor, Almas Temple Military Band, Patrol, Oriental Band and the Drum Corps.

Entertainment Given.

An innovation featured the opening of ceremonies at the Willard. It was in the form of an entertainment, for which Edwin C. Dutton acted as master of ceremonies. It opened with a cornet solo by a bandsman, continued with singing led by Jack Mullane and a burlesque fashion show in which men appeared in female clothing, and concluded with a concert by the Almas Temple "Nut Band," which was a sensation of the Seattle convention last year.

Then the ritualistic section of the degree began, as the Divan was conducted in by the Oriental Band. The ritualistic section of the degree was presented by the Divan officers, Ara M. Daniels, potentate; Granville Gude, chief rabban; Stanley D. Willis, assistant rabban; Karl E. Jarrell, high priest and prophet; Earl W. Shinn, Oriental guide; Howard P. Foley, first ceremonial master; Needham C. Turnage, second ceremonial master; E. Carlyn Guy, marshal, and James A. Councilor, captain of the guide.

Daniels Gives Charge.

The inspired charge was given by Potentate Ara M. Daniels, and Arthur G. Fessenden acted as orator.

The committee on arrangements was composed of L. Whiting Estes, past potentate of Almas Temple, in charge of novices. Stanley W. Bell, public speaking arrangements, and Dr. William J. B. Orr, medical committee.

Almas Temple Floor Team conducted the second section of the degree, under the direction of Ernest W. Snoots. After concluding the conferring of the degree, a program of entertainment was provided, followed by a buffet supper. The following Masonic dignitaries were present at this ceremonial, and were welcomed in Oriental manner by Daniels:

L. Whiting Estes, Charles D. Shackelford, Edwin C. Dutton, Robert S. Regar, Edward D. Anderson, Warren W. Grimes, Allen H. Potts and Leonard P. Steuart.

Steuart Speaks.

Steuart, imperial potentate in 1936, who recently was named imperial treasurer to succeed the late James C. Burger, of Denver, made a short address.

Those brought into Almas Temple were:

By affiliation — George Lyman Clark, George Llewellyn Goss, Jossie McCurdy, Charles Howard Riegner, Edward N. Riley and Carl Edgar Krafft.

By initiation — Russ Alexander, Carl E. Anderson, John C. Allen, Charles H. Bair, Harry B. Bair, Harry E. Benson, Stuart H. Boyer, William V. Carpenter, Robert C. Carter, Milton Cohen, Ray E. 800 Applaud Plea to Keep I. C. C. 'Clean'

'Coldly Neutral' Policy Is Praised on Golden Anniversary.

Faith in the wisdom and integrity of the Interstate Commerce Commission was manifest last night as 800 persons cheered their approval of the demand that the commission be kept ree from "entangling politics, and answerable only to the law."

The dinner, celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the commission, was held in the grand ballroom of the Mayflower Hotel. Twenty commissioners and former commissioners were guests of honor.

Declaring the entire work of the commission has been legislative, not judicial or executive, Luther Walter general counsel to the National Industrial Traffic League, warned the lawyers present "we will fail in our duty if we do not demand that the I. C. C. be left outside political control."

"I regret," he said, "that the Chief Executive of our country has accepted an executive reorganization report recommended by men who know little about the workings of the I. C. C."

Calling the commission an essential part of our "democratic way of life," Elmer A. Smith, general attorney for the Illinois Central System, said it had risen to its present prestige because it was in all cases "coldly neutral."

"A generation of railroad men and shippers," he said, "have grown up willing to be subject to the rulings of the I. C. C. As a result, there now exists between the two a higher plane of business ethics."

The birthday dinner had been sponsored by the Association of Practitioners before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Henry Wolf Bikle, general counsel to the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was toastmaster.

At the speakers' table were Commissioners Clyde B. Aitchison, Balthasar H. Meyer, Joseph B. Eastman, Frank McManamy, Claude R. Porter William E. Lee, Hugh M. Tate, Charles D. Mahaffie, Carroll Miller, Walter M. W. Splawn and Marion M. Caskie, former Commissioners Charles C. McChord, Robert W. Wooley, Mark W. Potter, Johnston B. Campbell, Ernest I. Lewis, Ezra Brainerd, jr., and Patrick J. Farrell, and Henry W. Bikle, Elmer A. Smith and Luther M. Walter.

Today at 10 a.m. the formal exercises celebrating the semi-centennial will begin. Among those to take part in discussion which will continue throughout the day are Joseph B. Eastman, commissioner; George M. Crosland, assistant director of the commission's bureau of traffic; Allan P. Matthew, practitioners' association president; John E. Benton, general solicitor of the National Association of Railroad and Utilities Commissioners; Commissioners Clyde B. Aitchison, Patrick J. Farrell and Balthasar H. Meyer; John J. Esch, former commissioner; Samuel Rayburn, majority leader of the House, and Senator Burton K. Wheeler.

Two colored men were held by police last night in connection with the theft of more than $5,000 worth of equipment from several garages and automobile accessory stores.

The men were arrested by Detective Sergts. Joseph W. Shimon and Harry Britton and most of the property has been recovered. The loot included automobile jacks, grinders, heaters and tools.

The suspects gave their names as Tom Coleman, 33, of 115 P street northwest, and William Blocker, 24, 417 New York avenue northwest. They will be charged with housebreaking, police said.

Large Airlines Seek Air Rule, Loening Warns

College Fliers Warned of Attempt to Control All Aeronautics.

Airlines are going to "push the private flier out of the air if they can," Grover Loening, aviation expert, World War flier and aircraft manufacturer told 150 members of the Intercollegiate Flying Club Conference at a banquet last night at the Shoreham.

He described increasing efforts by executives of commercial flying to dominate all aeronautics, adding that some of this domination was justified, referring to crowded airports where commercial planes should be granted precedence. He added that such organizations as Intercollegiate Flying Clubs are necessary to organize private fliers to protect their interests.

Unless private fliers organize, he predicted, they will be confronted with restrictive laws, detrimental to noncommercial aviation.

Clarence D. Martin, Harvard undergraduate and son of the Governor of Washington, received the Grover Loening trophy, awarded annually to the outstanding college flying club. Martin is president of the Harvard Flying Club and new president of the Intercollegiate Conference. It is the fourth time since 1929 that Harvard has won the trophy.

In addition to Martin, new officers announced last night were Jack Conway, of Purdue University, vice president, and John Railasback, University of Pennsylvania, secretary-treasurer. The University of Minnesota, with a delegation of 34 undergraduate fliers, was awarded a certificate for the largest number of delegates at the conference.

Airships are fundamentally safer than any other type of aircraft, according to Commander C. E. Rosendahl, United States Navy, in an earlier address at the Lafayette Hotel.

Most of the criticisms of dirigibles, he stated, are due to misunderstanding of the aims and purposes behind ther construction. He said he was convinced "more than ever before" that lighter-than-air craft have a definite function in commercial and military aeronautics.

Rosendahl was the principal speaker at yesterday morning's session. Other speakers were John Geisse, head of the development section of the Bureau of Air Commerce, and Maj. A. B. McMullen, chief of the airport section in the bureau.

Students' Parley on Peace Threatened by 'War Clouds

Skill and Coolness of Chairman Averts Clash as Tentative Constitution Is Debated by Catholic Group.

"War clouds" threatened to gather a number of times yesterday afternoon as the Student Peace Federation of the Catholic Association for International Peace threshed out a tentative constitution—sentence by sentence, word by word.

But for the patience of the chairman, Dr. John Tracy Ellis, of Catholic University, the whole document might have been discarded as a scrap of paper the tenth or twelfth time a certain young man raised his hand and said, "I object."

"The gentleman from Georgetown University objects," said the chairman. "Is there a discussion?" There was, in every case. James P. Walsh, of St. John's University, Brooklyn, had helped to formulate that constitution, and he was prepared to stand by it. He was flanked by two rosy-cheeked young men—also from St. John's—who stood staunchly with him. The gentleman from Georgetown continued to object. The chairman clarified the point for both debaters. Terms were changed. Sentences were changed. The constitution was weighed in the balance of a dozen different, youthful opinions and found not entirely wanting but definitely in need of being argued over, under and out.

The organization session began at 2:30. Four hours later the body had adopted "a tentative constitution, subject to revision and change in locality where the need seems to warrant it."

Earlier in the day, the young men and women who had participated in this part of the program had sat quietly and listened while other delegates and guests at the organization's first annual conference described youth's stake in the world's peace program.

At the morning session Dr. Tibor Kerekes, of Georgetown University, stressed that "No individual effort can be strong enough to solve the peace problem; but it can be solved by the concerted support of the present generation." Educated for peace, as former generations were educated for war, modern young men and women who in later years will hold important official positions can keep this country out of war, can help to rid the world of war, he said. "It is a work that challenges youth, and youth alone can bring about its accomplishment."

The "Moral Basis of a Permanent Peace" was discussed by Shirley Johns, of Albertus Magnus College, New Haven, who pointed out that Catholic students should be ideally fitted to lead in a program to keep the world out of war. James McAndrew, St. Thomas College, Scranton, and Helen J. Nolan, of American University, discussed the economic and political basis of permanent peace.

Dr. Charles G. Fenwick, president of the C. A. I. P., was the the speaker at the luncheon yesterday at which Helen Harrigan of the College of the Sacred Heart, New York, presided. Dr. Fenwick outlined and explained a constructive program for international peace as it had been evolved in the two-day session of the C. A. I. P., meeting Monday and Tuesday of this week.

D. C. Man Accused Of Six Break-Ins

Six charges of housebreaking were placed against Donald Ward Prendergast, 23, Sherman Circle, yesterday after he is alleged to have confessed entering a series of residences last month

Prendergast was seized at his home Sunday morning by Detective Sergts. Robert Bryant, Thomas Sullivan and Ben Johnson. The loot, all recovered, amounted to more than $3,000, the detectives said.

Allen Approves Minimum Pay For All in D. C.

Soroptimist Club Also Urges Passage of General Bill in District.

President Roosevelt's belief that a District minimum wage law should apply to men as well as women and children was wholeheartedly approved yesterday by Commissioner George E. Allen.

His declaration was taken to mean that the Commissioners would seriously consider such a recommendation should a new District minimum wage law be passed.

Meanwhile, the Soroptimist Club of the District passed a resolution yesterday requesting the President and the leaders in Congress to bring about enactment to make any minimum wage law for the District apply to men as well as to women and children.

Copies of the resolution were sent to the President, the Vice President, the Speaker of the House and the chairmen and members of the House and Senate District Committees.

The resolution was passed as the civic group held its luncheon meeting in the Willard Hotel.

"I don't see why a minimum wage law should not be made to apply to men as well as women," Commissioner Allen said, after stating his view.

"It would have somewhat the effect of restoring the NRA.

Workers Cite Need for Aid To City's Idle

Describe Suffering of Numerous Families of Employables.

A woman, "employable," wth four little children huddled in one room without food; an aged couple, also dubled "employable" moving in with a young son who has a young wife and baby to support also from his $16 a week; a father, mother and two children living in one room and sleeping in one bed; these were a few of the actual cases described at yesterday's meeting of the committee on the Citizen's Mass Meeting in Behalf of the Unemployed.

The cases were reported by Miss Louise O. Beall, of the Family Service Association, who is in charge of 82 volunteers now making a survey of employable people who are denied relief.

The woman with four children had been on relief for three years. She obtained a temporary job which lasted only a few weeks and was promptly dropped from the relief rolls. Now she has no job, no money and her children are hungry.

"This mass meeting at the First Congregational Church next Sunday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock is arranged to give Washington a chance to do something in behalf of people like these," Coleman Jennings, chairman of the committee planning the mass meeting, said. "These people are residents of Washington. They have to be because no relief is granted to any person who has not lived in the District for a year or more. As a matter of fact, the last survey of the relief situation, made before the 'employables' were dropped, showed that 85 per cent of the people on relief had been residents of the District for five years or more.

"It is time for a mass meeting. It is time that Washington be given an opportunity to express itself in regard to this critical situation. Next Sunday's meeting will provide that opportunity. I hope to see the First Congregational Church packed with interested Washingtonians when that meeting is called to order, because something must be done for these people."

Canon Anson Phelps Stokes appeared before the Rotary Club yesterday, urging them, as civic minded citizens, to attend next Sunday's mass meeting and help to solve the problem confronting the city. He outlined the serious situation that exists in public relief and which forced the dropping of 3,000 employable people from relief rolls. He made the second point of the inability of the private family agencies to help these people because of limited budgets.

Plans for the mass meeting are virtually complete. It will last exactly one hour, opening with a program of organ music at 4:30 o'clock and continuing from 4:45 to 5:30 o'clock with a program of short speeches by prominent citizens, actual case stories taken from the records of the 3,000 "employables" and the presentation of resolutions for indorsement by those present at the meeting.

'Good Earth' Heads List of Theater Bills

'Old Maid,' at the Belasco, and Other Programs Will Provide Full Week.

Beginning next Sunday night, the reserved seat, "road show" engagement of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's superb picturization of Pearl S. Buck's expansive novel of "The Good Earth" will be inaugurated at the National Theater, with Paul Muni and Luise Rainer in the costellar roles of Wang Lung, the Chinese farmer, and O-Lan, his long-suffering and patient wife. These two were the winners of the Academy awards for the best screen acting of 1936. They are supported by a cast of splendid selection and an ensemble of thousands. Foremost among the principal players are Walter Connolly, as "Uncle;" Charles Grapewin, as Wang's father, and Tilly Losch, as the beautiful dancer, Lotus. The production is one of the most impressive ever brought to the screen and some of the photographic effects are such as to cause wonderment as to how they ever may have been achieved. "The Good Earth" will be shown twice daily at 2:30 and 8:30 p. m. for an extended run.

According to present plans, the next attraction at the Belasco Theater will be "The Old Maid," a play never before presented in the National Capital. While the original cast will not be brought to Washington in tact, the major roles will be interpreted by players of the first rank. "The Old Maid" will open on Monday night and matinees will be presented on both Thursday and Saturday.

"Seventh Heaven," Twentieth Century-Fox's new picturization of the play by Austin Strong, will be the principal screen attraction at Loew's Capitol Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, with James Stewart and Simone Simon in the roles of Chico and Diane, created in the nontalking version by Charles Farrell and Janet Gaynor in 1927. They are supported by a cast of superior excellence, headed by Gregory Ratoff, Jean Hersholt, Gale Sondergaard, J. Edward Bromberg, John Qualen, Victor Kilian, Sig Rumann, Thomas Beck, Rafaela Ottiano, Mady Christians and Georges Renavent. On the stage, the vaudeville bill will be headlined by the Salici Puppets and will include Medley, Dupree and Kay, Katya and Kay, and, as an extra added attraction, Fray and Braggiotti, wizards at the grand pianos.

Carole Lombard and Fred MacMurray will be the pictured co-stars at the Warner Brothers' Earl Theater for the week beginning tomorrow in "Swing High, Swing Low," a romance with incidental music. The film sets forth a story of night life in Panama and New York and offers its stars ample outlets for their versatile talents, Miss Lombard occasionally bursting into song and Mr. MacMurray playing a "hot" trumpet. After a year away from his native city, Bert Granoff, Washington's favorite tenor, will return to the Earle next week to headline the stage portion of the entertainment. He will be assisted by Carolyn Henry, soprano, and Dean Herrick, organist. The vaudeville bill also will present the Four Eton Boys, from radio; Art Frank, with Vivien Peterson; Harry King and the Sinclair Twins, and Ray and Trent.

With Charles Boyer and Jean Arthur in the leading roles, "History Is Made at Night" will come to the screen at the RKO-Keith's Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The supporting cast is led by Leo Carrillo, a Washington favorite, and Colin Clive, the popular British actor, familiar to American audiences on both stage and screen. The bill will be augmented by a varied assortment of abbreviated camera subjects and a new issue of the Pathe News.

Chester Morris, Leo Carrillo, Helen Mack and Thomas Mitchell are cast in the outstanding roles in "I Promise to Pay," the Columbia Pictures production which will be presented as chief feature of the screen bill at the Metropolitan Theater for the week beginning tomorrow. The story of this subject deals with the loan shark racket and has a young clerk who borrows $50 as it central figure. The bill will be completed by short-reel subjects and full, 15-minute newsreel.

Jeeves, that admirable gentleman's gentleman plucked from between the covers of Pelham Granville Wodehouse's amusing novels, will occupy the screen at Loew's Columbia Theater for the week beginning tomorrow, in the person of Arthur Treacher, peer of all the cinema's butlers. Patricia Ellis and Robert Kent are the other principals in the cast, which includes Alan Dinehart, George Givot and Helen Flint. Short reels and "News of the Day" will complete the bill.

As was to have been expected of so fine a production, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's picturization of Sigmund Romberg's operetta of "Maytime" will continue a second week at the Palace. Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy, neither ever in better voice, are the singing stars of this magnificent example of what can be done with music on the screen. They are supported by John Barrymore, Rafaela Ottiano, the Don Cossack Choir, Herman Bing, Tom Brown, Lynne Garver and many more.

Beginning on Saturday of this week, the Rialto Theater will present "The Robber Symphony," produced, directed and composed by Frederick Feher, who made "The Cabinet of Dr. Caligari" years ago. This is described as one of the unique products of the cinema. The story is a whimsical and fantastic one, with music executed in the Viennese mood. It concerns a small boy, his donkey, his dog and a band of musical robbers.

For the fifth time, "The Informer," starring Victor McLaglen in the title role, with Margot Grahame and Preston Foster in support, will be returned to the screen at the Little Theater for a week's engagement, beginning Sunday. That seems to be all that need said.

That veteran of burlesque comics, the original Billy Watson and his record-breaking "Beef Trust Beauties," will return to the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with the usual matinee next Sunday afternoon. The feminine contingent will be headed by Pearl Mylie, Nadine Marsh and Marie Oliver.

Nelson B. Bell About The Show Shops

Hans Feher, Son of the Producer, Composer, Director and Conductor of "The Robber Symphony," Will Appear With Each Showing of the Picture, Beginning Saturday; Bert Granoff to Be Feted Today; Mr. Lust Returns From the Subtropics Full of Ideas; a Little More About "Maytime;" Notes.

WHEN Frederick Feher, a present visitor in Washington, presents his unique musical film, "The Robber Symphony," at the Rialto Theater for the week beginning Saturday, his sturdy young son, born in Vienna about 13 years ago, and the lad's inseparable "Man Friday"—a big, woolly, black dog named Satan—will be seen in the principal roles. Another member of Herr Feher's immediate family, I believe, also plays a part in this unusual production for which Feher wrote music and libretto in addition to directing both the orchestra heard in the picture and the making of the film, all at the same time.

BELL.

Hans Feher, the boy, who was only 10 when the picture was begun—it was three years in the making—found his faithful dog friend in the Paris pound when he and his father went in search of a good, husky animal that could survive the rigors of work in the high Alps.

When they arrived at the pound, the maestro was weary. So he told his son to "go ahead and pick out a dog." The boy wandered around and finally hit upon this curled-up, black, ragged-looking bundle of dog off in a corner. He was such a lovable beast that he had been kept in the pound three weeks instead of the customary seven days before being painlessly gassed. The next day had been set as his "dead line," so the story goes, and only the visit of the youthful Hans saved him from an early trip to dog heaven.

Hans is in Washington with his father and has the dog with him. They will make "personal appearances" together on the stage of the Rialto at each showing of "The Robber Symphony." Hans says Satan is like a Paris cocktail—he is such a mixture! Mostly, he thinks, Satan is Belgian sheep dog. Somewhere in his ancestry he may have had a distinguished spaniel in the line. He is definitely a one-man dog.

Hans Feher is the man.

Bert Granoff, who returns to the stage of the Earle Theater tomorrow to headline the vaudeville for the new week after a year's absence in Chicago, is being feted this afternoon by Zone Manager John J. Payette and his associate Warner executives in the Warner Club rooms in the Earle Theater Building. It may be that Bert will find time to sing a song or two between sandwiches and ice cream sodas.

Sidney B. Lust, one of the Capital's foremost independent film exhibitors and exchange men, signalizes his return from Florida, where he attended the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theater Owners of America—at which Ed Kuykendall was re-elected president for the fourth time, or was it only the third?—and did a little deep-sea fishing with Carter Barron, Eastern district manager for Loew's, Inc., and A. Julian Brylawski, real estate manager for the Warner Brothers in this territory, by sending jars of delicious orange marmalade to the drama desks. Mine already is half gone after only one early morning session with some warmed-over Easter hot cross buns!

Mr. Lust also comes home charged with news items, as usual. For instance, he has a remote interest in the opening of the new 1,300-seat Reed Theater in Alexandria, Va., on next Monday night, April 5. The stockholders and board of directors of the new enterprise tendered Harmon Reed, sponsor of the project, a surprise dinner in the George Mason Hotel in Alexandria last night.

The Reed was designed and built by Architect John Zink, of Baltimore, who also put up the Rialto and Uptown theaters in this city, among others.

The returned fisherman also informs me that the Fathers and Sons banquet, sponsored by the Hebrew Congregation of Washington, will be celebrated at the Mayflower Hotel on April 29, with Mr. Lust again the general chairman of the arrangement committee. He graciously has made this desk a member of his committee, an appointment which I accept with pleasure, having been greatly impressed by the spirit of this occasion last year.

Furthermore, on April 13, a dinner is to be given at the Mayflower in honor of Jeremiah T. Mahoney, president of the National Amateur Athletic Union. Along with Gene Ford, manager of Loew's Capitol; Harry E. Lohmeyer, of the Warner executive staff; Andrew R. Kelley, of the Times, and Jay Carmody, of the Star, this column also has been appointed to the entertainment committee for this occasion. I will go along on this one with equal pleasure and gratification.

Having made a belated, but not a deliberately dilatory, visit to Loew's Palace to view Metro-Golwyn-Mayer's picturization of Sigmund Romberg's "Maytime," I now am able to identify this work as one of the most delightful that has been brought before the public. It would be a great deal more surprising to learn that this pretentious musical were not to be retained at the Palace for a second week than to learn that it is.

Having sat enthralled by the beauty of this production, I recommend it, without hesitation or reservation, as the nearest perfection, and the best recorded, film operetta ever brought to the screen. Never before have I heard such clarity of tone as marks the solo numbers and ensembles in which Jeanette MacDonald, Nelson Eddy and the Don Cossack Choir are featured.

Another effective touch in the picturization of the famous stage piece is the utilization of tinted film to lend delicate color and "atmosphere" to several of the scenes. The Maytime blossom scenes are done in an exquisite pastel shade of pink—not to be confused with the Technicolor process, but a complete dipping of the film in the coloration—and on other occasions the same device is resorted to in order to enhance the pictorial effect. The same thing is done in "The Good Earth," opening at the National Sunday night, except that sepia tones are employed to point the drab movement of the drama.

But to get back to the main issue: If you haven't seen "Maytime," don't let it get away. And you had better see "The Good Earth," too.

Running-True-to-Form Note.

The drama desks of the local press will find a great deal of truth in the title of the picture coming into RKO-Keith's tomorrow—"History Is Made at Night." It sure is!

One Way in Which History Is Made

Charles Boyer and Jean Arthur, costars of "History Is Made at Night," opening on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater tomorrow, in this close embrace seem to be attempting a concrete demonstration of how history sometimes is put in the making. Mr. Boyer will be recalled as costar with Marlene Dietrich in "The Garden of Allah" and Miss Arthur perhaps best for her work opposite Gary Cooper in "Mr. Deeds Goes to Town." Leo Carrillo and Colin Clive head the supporting cast.

Col. Miller Loses Battle to Retain Noted 101 Ranch

Ponca City, Okla., March 31 (AP).—Broke and weary from years of fighting to retain his "inland empire" of 101,000 acres, Col. Zack T. Miller surrendered the historic 101 Ranch white house to creditors today.

"He just didn't have money to keep up the fight," said Sid White, cowboy attorney, who aided Miller in a long legal struggle. The ranch once was home of the famous 101 Wild West Show. "He's all broken up."

Miller told friends when he turned over the white house—ranch headquarters—to Deputy Marshal Roy Hopper that he was "heading for Oklahoma City to see about a job with the State Board of Affairs."

Surrender of the homestead came after the United States Circuit Court of Appeals denied a rehearing of a decision awarding the property to the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Co., a deed holder.

The Resettlement Administration is considering plans to turn the ranch to tenant farmers as part of a rehabilitation program.

Ever since the German cinematographic production of "Maedchen in Uniform" was presented in the Capital, it has been the desire of theatergoers to witness the stage version of this poignant story of scholastic imperialism. Last evening at the Wardman Park Theater that chance was possible as the Civic Theater staged "Girls in Uniform."

Perhaps the memory of the picture is too vivid, in spite of the some five years of elapsed time, but the current translation of the work fails in being convincing either as a play or, as in the case of the picture, an indictment of a system.

Played without enthusiasm, with lines being read almost by rote, "Girls in Uniform" moved with an unnatural ponderosity and without evoking any particular sympathy or resentment for the dominated and misunderstood Manuela, or against the typical Prussian arrogance of the headmistress.

Is Morbid Story.

Briefly, the story is that of a girl left by her father in a North German school, conducted on strict disciplinarianism. Sensitive, tenderly reared, she longs for maternal affection, which she finally finds in a teacher who is battling in her own way against the hard existence of the students. Manuela's cravings are misunderstood and, when she finds the penalty for injudicious, wine-inspired remarks in solitude, she commits suicide.

To the part of Manuela, Virginia Phelan brought a charming wistfulness but a surity of speech and action which somewhat belied those attributes of youth and unsophistication. However, in her several emotional outbursts she in a large measure compensated for other shortcomings.

As the headmistress, Lois Hutchins was sufficiently austere. Irene Schmidt, as Fraeulein von Bernburg, the teacher who would mother the children, was good, and gave one of the better readings of the evening in her climactic denouncement of the regime.

Minna Adams, as the Grand Duchess, patroness of the school, and Bunnie Skinner, the school's wardrobe mistress, gave the best performances, drawing everything from the small character parts.

The Support.

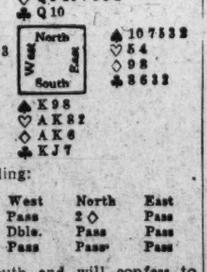
Contract Bridge

By Mrs. Ely Culbertson.

Most of us, regardless of sex, age or condition, love to "get away with something." The victories in which we overwhelm our opponents with high cards are not the ones that linger delightfully in our memories. Perhaps we are all a wee bit crooked, because the fact of the matter is that stolen tricks are the sweetest tricks of all. For instance, I thoroughly enjoyed the hand shown below.

South, dealers.
Both sides vulnerable.



The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♡	Pass	2 ◇	Pass
3 N T	Dble.	Pass	Pass
Redble.	Pass	Pass	Pass

I sat South and will confess to astonishment when I heard West double. Certain that he had delivered himself into my hands, I resolved to make him pay dearly.

The heart Queen was the opening lead. I won with the ace, and saw at a glance that eleven tricks were cold—seven diamonds, two hearts and two tricks in whichever black suit I should attack. That was pretty good, but I saw a possibility of even greater reward.

I led a low spade toward dummy, and West held up his Ace. I returned to the Ace of diamonds and laid down the Jack of clubs—my object again being to get West to play low second hand. He obliged me, and now the stage was all set.

I laid down the diamond King and led a third round to dummy's long suit. On the fourth and fifth diamonds I discarded spades; on the sixth and seventh I let go my two remaining clubs. With three cards left in all hands—dummy's were the spade Queen, club Queen and a heart; mine were the K-8-2 of hearts, and as for poor West—well, his cards were worthless! With the necessity to reduce to three cards, he had had to make the hopeless choice of letting go either the spade Ace or the club Ace, or his heart protection. Regardless of his choice, I was bound to make the rest of the tricks.

As it happened he let go the club Ace, and now the good club Queen squeezed him again.

Budget Measure Reflects Strong Personality of Mississippian.

The 1938 supply bill for the District of Columbia, which goes to the Senate after disposition by the House, proposes municipal reforms of transcendent importance. How were they decided upon? What do they provide? Whom do they affect? Why were appropriations for some agencies increased and others decreased? Following is the first of a series of stories dealing with these questions.

The first prerequisite to an understanding of the 92-page, controversy-packed appropriations measure scheduled to come up on the House floor today is an understanding, or at least an appraisal, of its author.

Theoretically, the annual supply bill furnishing funds to run the Nation's Capital is the work of a five-man sub-committee, as far as the House is concerned. Actually, it is a one-man product and this year the soloist happened to be Representative Ross Alexander Collins, of Meridian, Miss.

Culminating a string of searching hearings which began February 9, the bill now before the House orders an inquiry into telephone rates, places the municipal hospitals under the health department, abolishes the Receiving Home for Children, takes half its playgrounds from the Playground Department, reorganizes numerous governmental units and provides for scores more innovations.

Every Resident Affected.

Every man, woman and child living here is directly or indirectly affected by the proposed appropriations act and thousands of District employes, salaried and per diem alike, are directly involved in the pay roll and promotion riders.

The man who has instituted these sweeping changes, is a placid, mid[illegible]-aged gentleman from the Deep South.

Lauderdale County, where Chairman Collins was born, bred, schooled, which gave him a wife and where he still lives, is said to be one of the best governed jurisdictions in the South, if not the country. That its efficient political machinery and institutions have borne considerable influence upon him in his debut as father and guardian of the District pocketbook is certain.

A former attorney general of the State of Mississippi (1911-1919), Collins' legal propensities are amply demonstrated throughout the 1,065-page printed transcript of the hearings before his sub-committee. He places directness and frankness above all other virtues when questioning witnesses, has no patience with circumlocutors.

Hard, Clean Fighter.

Soft spoken and unassuming, he is known as one of the hardest and cleanest fighters in the House. Even when aroused to great anger he keeps his temper in check.

He likes to know something about the agencies and activities over which he has such broad fiscal powers and so, without fanfare or publicity, he visited Gallinger Hospital, the jail, police stations and many other units whose fate is very largely in his hands.

Collins, who will be 57 on April 28, holds degrees from Transylvania and Mississippi Universities, and practiced law in his home town of Meridian for 11 years before being elected attorney general. He is the father of a daughter, 21, and a son, 16.

Representative Collins and James D. Secrest, Capitol reporter, will be interviewed by Tom McCarthy, The Post radio commentator, over station WMAL tonight at 8:30 o'clock.

He is an Episcopalian, a Mason, an ardent supporter of mechanization of the Army, a plain dresser and a home lover. This is his first turn in the chairman's saddle, but he is no stranger on the District appropriations sub-committee.

As a humble minority Democrat he was a member of the House continuously during the Republican regime, beginning with Harding's inauguration and ending on March 4, 1933. He was re-elected the previous November, too, but stayed out of the House race in 1934 to try for the Senate. Losing, he missed the Seventy-Fourth Congress, but was returned to his Fifth District seat last fall.

Did Not Want Post.

When committee chairmanships were being dispensed at the opening of the present session, Collins, possessing experience on District matters through his previous membership on the Appropriations Committee, was selected for his present post—which he neither sought nor wanted.

"I'd rather have the itch," he said, knowing fully that this particular responsibility is one of the most thankless, soul-trying headaches on Capitol Hill.

But he took the job and the hearings were opened, bringing the heads of Washington's municipal government face to face with an interrogator who was different from those who had gone before.

He made many a bureau head squirm as he probed for the facts—the unadulterated facts—like a doctor removing a deeply embedded splinter.

The thick tome in which these interviews are recorded is a veritable mirror reflecting not only the man Collins, but also the foibles and idiosyncracies of the men and women who make the District government go 'round.

His cross-examinations, while scathingly sarcastic at times, were more often than not cushioned with it.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools; Elwood Street, public welfare director, and Miss Sibyl Baker, playground director, among others, spent uncomfortable hours as Collins criticized, by inference, items under their control.

Again, he would make his witnesses laugh, such as the time he questioned Isaac Gans, member of the ABC board, to learn why Washingtonians are not permitted to stand up when they drink at bars. Collins suggested that the spread of sit-down strikes might be responsible.

By such interchanges, supplemented by the presentation of voluminous statistical data and personal inspections, did Collins and his committee decide which salaries should be cut, which slashed; which activities co-ordinated or consolidated; which functions encouraged and which abolished.

In Hollywood

With JIMMY FIDLER

HOLLYWOOD, March 31.—Settin' Around (Universal): Head mogul Charles Rogers is a man after my own heart. When he assumed charge of this studio about one year ago he announced that he would produce pictures filled with light entertainment.

"The country has been through a depressing, discouraging period," he said then. "People want to forget their troubles, and bright pictures will clean up at box offices."

Observing this "let-us-be-gay" policy, the studio promptly turned out "My Man Godfrey," "Show Boat," "Three Smart Girls," and more recently "Top of the Town," All Universal pictures to date have had happy endings. If a happy ending is implausible, Rogers simply will not okeh the story.

I found "The Cop" set in a state of uproar. It seemed that Nan Grey (a real comer if there ever was one) had a new Scottie pup, and it was creating minor havoc by rushing around pulling at curtains and draperies, nipping ankles, and cavorting in general. Moreover, it skillfully eluded capture. "What's your dog's name?" I yelled over the uproar. "Happy Landings," Nan shouted back. At which point the director, upset by the delay, yapped, "If you don't get him out of here, he'll be making a landing about two blocks away, but I don't think it will be happy!"

The "Oh, Doctor" set was a tea garden. Dozens of girls-you-dream-about were dressed in gal summer clothes or stretched at the edge of a swimming pool in devastating bathing suits (not a man on the set was wearing dark glasses!). Everyone seemed happy except big William Hall, the leading man.

Bill's gripe was funny. Preparing for this sequence in which he was to wear a bathing suit, he had spent three days acquiring a tan. But the big silly did his sun bathing in slacks, so while his arms and back were a beautiful nut-brown, his legs were pale by comparison. Consequently he was undergoing the discomfort of wearing tan makeup on his legs and thighs so they would match other visible parts of his body.

On the same set Edward Everett Horton was worrying as usual, this time about the picture. A pessimist by nature (most screen and stage comedians are), he shook his head when I asked about the picture's progress. "It won't be good," he groaned. "It won't be good. We look at the rushes every afternoon, and everybody rolls in the aisles. I'm superstitious—it won't be a good picture!"

William Gargan was playing tick-tack-toe with Wendy Barrie and everybody was sitting around idle on the "Wings Over Honolulu" set. I asked if this were a sit-down strike. "We're waiting for Ray Milland," was the assistant director's explanation. "We put in a hurry call for him, but it'll take him half an hour to get here." Just then Milland walked on the set. "How'd you get here so soon?" cried the assistant. "Just a lucky break," Ray cracked. "I had all the red lights with me!"

value fixed by the corporation for sale, or the book value fixed by District assessor is more. Wherever a corporation's capital is not divided into shares, the whole property shall be deemed to be the value of the capital stock.

A board of appeals is provided for corporations which object to the levies of the assessor. It is composed of the three commissioners, the auditor, and the corporation counsel. The aggrieved party must file an appeal within ten days, and the decision of the board shall be final.

Failure of corporations to file annual reports in March or April for the preceding calendar year shall make the corporation subject to the amount of the tax, plus interest, together with a flat penalty of $100 and an accumulative fine of $5 a day.

Theaters: The bill imposing a license tax on certain places of amusements specifies motion picture theaters and combination motion picture and vaudeville houses. The levy is 2 per cent of monthly gross receipts, less the amount paid as the Federal amusement tax.

Price Increases Prohibited.

The theaters are specifically prohibited from increasing the price of admission to cover the tax.

Operators are required to file monthly sworn statements showing gross receipts of the previous month with the tax assessor. Books must be kept open for inspection, and the assessor is authorized to administer rules and regulations approved by the commissioners.

The board of personal tax appeals is authorized to receive appeals within ten days. If the aggrieved party is still dissatisfied, he may appeal to the United States District Court.

Any theater that refuses or neglects to file a return, pay the tax, or violates the regulations is automatically enjoined from doing business subject to a penalty of $1,000 to be collected by civil suit.

The theater operators are directed to file with the assessor before July 1, when the tax would become effective, statements showing the capacities of the houses and request certificates of operation as required by the bill.

Insurance: On and after May 1 all types of insurance companies in the District must obtain annual licenses from the superintendent of insurance upon payment of $25 fee. The penalty is $100 for violation. They must, moreover, file annual statements, together with a fee of $20, before March 1 for the preceding year under penalty of having their licenses revoked.

The companies are then taxed at the rate of 2 per cent of policy and membership fees and net premium receipts on all insurance contracts. Exemptions are allowed on "net premium receipts" for (1) premiums returned or not taken; (2) premiums paid or reinsurance, and (3) dividends paid in cash or used by policyholders in payment of renewal premiums.

The penalty for failure to pay this tax before March 1 each year is the amount of the tax plus [illegible] per cent interest monthly until paid.

Parking lots: Every owner or lessor, or manager of parking lots shall pay a yearly tax on the following scale:

Capacity of 10 to 20 cars, $10; 20 to 30 cars, $20; 30 to 50 cars, $35; 50 to 75 cars, $60; 75 to 125 cars, $80; 120 to 175 cars, $125; 175 to 250 cars, $175; 250 to 350 cars, $250; 350 to 500 cars, $350; over 500 cars, $450.

All lots would be subject to regulations prescribed by the Commissioners and enforced by the tax assessor.

Imposes Income Tax.

The major Mapes bill imposes an income tax on all District residents. It would be substituted for the intangible personal property tax now in operation but admittedly ineffective.

Exempted, however, are "persons in the service of the United States Government, appointed or elected for a definite term of office * * * unless actually a resident of the District of Columbia."

Exemptions allowed persons are as follows: $1,000 for single persons, $2,500 for married couples, with $300 for each dependent child under 18 years of age or other dependent actually supported by the taxpayer.

Tax Rates Explained.

The tax is at the rate of 1 per cent of net income not exceeding $2,000; 1½ per cent between $2,000 and $5,000; 2 per cent from $5,000 to $10,000; 2½ per cent from $10,000 to $15,000; 3 per cent from $15,000 to $20,000; 3½ per cent from $20,000 to $30,000; 4 per cent from $30,000 to $50,000; 5 per cent in excess of $50,000.

Inheritance tax: The tax ranges from 1 per cent on estates up to $50,000 to 15 per cent for those over $5,000,000.

If the total District tax does not exceed, after all deductions and exemptions, 80 per cent of the amount of tax imposed under the Federal inheritance law, an additional tax is authorized.

The purpose of this bill is to obtain credit for the District of its share of the Federal tax in the same proportion as that paid to the States.

Woman Practiced on Targets Before Shooting French Count

Mme. La Ferriere, Who Called Mussolini Her Lover, Trained Trigger Finger for de Chambrun Assault Because of Broken Romance.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, March 31.—Dark-haired Mme. Madeline Le Ferriere told an examining magistrate today she trained her triger finger in a shooting gallery before she shot Count Charles de Chambrun, March 17, at the North Station.

Her tiny gun, which slightly wounded the count, former French Ambassador to Rome, was purchased from a well known arms dealer. Then, after practice, Mme. La Ferriere said, she telephoned de Chambrun's home, using an assumed name.

She learned he was departing for Brussels. Just as de Chambrun was boarding a train she sent a bullet into his thigh to avenge what she declared was interference with her friendship with Premier Benito Mussolini.

In Rome, she said, she had taken poison because of the broken friendship, but friends intervened to save her life. While she was convalescent, one of Mussolini's secretaries brought her flowers and letters.

It was decided, Mme. La Ferriere said, to get her out of Rome before Gen. Herrmann Wilhelm Goering, No. 2 Nazi, arrived for an official visit. Then she received a railway ticket to Paris and 25,000 lire (about $1,250).

With a series of letters to Rome she vainly attempted to revive the friendship, she said, but the letters went unanswered.

Mussolini's name emblazoned in newspapers when he started to Libya caused her to plan the shooting of De Chambrun, said Mme. La Ferriere.

The former ambassador, still in a hospital, has engaged an attorney to press charges against his assailant.

6. Apparent defeat of the scheme of Europe's powers to extend their Spanish neutrality project to include non-European countries. Mexico sent a note to the League of Nations denouncing nonintervention as unfair to the Spanish loyalists to whom she is shipping ammunitions, arms and supplies.

Mexico's Secret Notes.

7. Mexico's secret notes to almost every nation of the world, charging that the nonintervention plan is a mere cloak for Fascist-Nazi aid to the rebels and asking what the powers think about such a situation.

8. Foreboding silence on the part of Germany and Italy toward the Mexican appeal to the League, coupled with repeated Italian warnings that any League attempt to interfere with Mussolini's role in Spain might "bring Europe to the precipice of war."

9—Russia, stanchest friend of the Spanish lowalists in Europe because of Soviet fears that a satellite Fascist state may be created in the peninsula if Franco wins, threatened to deliver a severe blow to the territorial ambitions of Adolf Hitler and Benito Mussolini. Russia, apparently clearing the way for an alliance with Roumania similar to her pacts with France and Czechoslovakia, announced that she recognized Roumania's Bessarabian sovereignty and border rights.

In connection with London reports that action by Washington and London, in concert, to ease the situation in Europe is under consideration, observers noted yesterday that the visit here of Lord Tweedsmuir with the third, within a comparatively few weeks, by an official high in British circles.

Visit By Runciman.

On January 23, Walter Runciman, president of the British Board of Trade, a cabinet minister, visited the President, and as a result, hope was expressed here that eventually a British-American reciprocal trade pact would be worked out.

Late in February, Prime Minister W. L. MacKenzie King, of Canada, was a White House guest, and it was generally understood that he and the President discussed world affairs, the proposed St. Lawrence Waterway treaty, and the possible effect of a British-American trade pact on the existing treaty between this country and Canada.

While President Roosevelt's activity in the interest of European peace is not unheralded, the activities have been conducted so quietly that the now apparent extent has not been fully realized. Last year, a considerable time before the political campaign, the President was reported to be keenly interested in the growing intensity of European disagreements and eager to do something to lessen the danger of an outbreak.

Pursuing his "good neighbor" policy, he called the Buenos Aires conference and made the long trip there to open it. Accomplishments of the gathering have given him an example to set before the other powers and an impressive talking point as to the value of co-operation and consultation.

At Sugar Parley.

Ambasador Davis went to London ostensibly to attend the international sugar conference, but Secretary of State Hull, at the time said the roving ambassador would talk with officials there before it was determined whether Davis should go on to Geneva for the meeting of the disarmament steering committee on May 5.

Davis' Conferences.

In London, Davis intends to confer with Ramsay MacDonald, Lord President of the Council and former prime minister; Runciman, and William Ormsby-Gore, secretary for the colonies. An American traveling with the Ambassador was quoted by the Associated Press as saying Davis would "take up where Mr. Runciman left off in Washington," to further the prospects for a trade agreement.

In line with Secretary Hull's conviction that removal of trade barriers will do much to preserve peace, Davis is understood to be prepared to emphasize that point. In urging a conference he likewise is following the idea of the Secretary of State, who revealed at a House Appropriations Committee hearing some weeks ago that he had made similar representations to an important European diplomat whom he did not name.

"So I said, why cannot you European statesmen at least attempt this kind of a movement? Why just sit still and float on with a hopelessly unsound economic situation, with a hopelessly disturbed, not to say chaotic political situation; why not make this effort?"

While reaction of nations abroad to suggestions for a possible armament limitation conference was reported to be varied, it was felt here that efforts of President Roosevelt and Secretary Hull are not concerned so much with an armament conference as with consultations that might remove the causes of disputes and rivalries that lead to armament races. There was understood to be the feeling here that should such causes, including trade barriers, be eliminated, huge armament building programs will be less likely.

Mary Lincoln Dies, Widow of President's Son

Burial Will Be in Family Plot at Arlington Cemetery.

The last link with one of America's most famous names was broken yesterday morning at 8 o'clock when Mrs. Mary Harlan Lincoln, daughter-in-law of Abraham Lincoln, died at her home, 3014 N street, in Georgetown.

Wife of the great emancipator's eldest son, Robert Todd Lincoln, she was born in Iowa City, Iowa, 90 years ago, the daughter of Senator and Mrs. James Harlan. At an early age she came to Washington with her father, who was in the Senate during the Lincoln Administration until he was appointed Secretary of the Interior.

She met Robert Lincoln while his father was in the White House. In 1868 they were married in Senator Harlan's home near H and Seventeenth streets. Shortly afterward, they went to live in Chicago, where Mr. Lincoln was a member of a leading law firm, and where they remained until 1881, when he was called to Washington by President Garfield to be Secretary of War.

Husband Died in 1926.

A popular and gracious "Cabinet wife," Mrs. Lincoln later became one of the most charming diplomatic hostesses in London, while her husband served for several years as the U. S. Minister to Great Britain. When they returned to America in 1893, they went back to Chicago to make their home. In 1914, when Mr. Lincoln retired from active practice they moved to Washington. For a number of years, they spent their winters here and their summers in Manchester, Vt., where Mr. Lincoln died in 1926.

Since then, Mrs. Lincoln has lead a quiet, somewhat secluded life. Like her husband, she has refused to make capital of the greatness of her father-in-law and has avoided undue publicity. In the past decade she has devoted most of her attention toward carrying on the many philanthropies in which her husband was interested, and she has made many valuable contributions to Lincolniana in the Library of Congress.

Donated Tower to Church.

Among these are the Lincoln family Bible, the Bible on which Lincoln took his oath at inauguration, and a letter from Queen Victoria to Mary Todd Lincoln after the President was assassinated.

Some time ago, Mrs. Lincoln donated the Lincoln Memorial Tower to the New York Avenue Presbyterian Church—the church her noted father-in-law attended while he was President. Before her husband's death she gave with him the widely known picture of Mary Todd Lincoln that now hangs in the White House.

Mrs. Lincoln's only son, Abraham Lincoln 2d, died in London in 1890. She is survived by two daughters, Mrs. Charles Isham and Mrs. Robert J. Randolph, both of Washington, and three grandchildren—Miss Mary Lincoln Beckwith and Robert Lincoln Beckwith (a daughter and son of Mrs. Randolph), who live here, and Lincoln Isham, of New York. Funeral services will be private, followed by burial in Arlington National Cemetery.

Invitation on Car By Guyer Accepted Daily by Secretary

Unable to locate the owner of an automobile from home he spotted on a Washington street, Representative Guyer (Republican), Kansas, left his card with an invitation:

"Come in and see me."

Yesterday he told his secretary, Russell Jones about it.

"It's been a week now," said he. "I've seen that car several times. I wonder why the owner doesn't come in and see us."

"Sir," responded Jones, "he's been in every day. It was my car."

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Concert by the National Symphony Orchestra (Hans Kindler, conductor; Percy Grainger, piano soloist) in Constitution Hall Wednesday afternoon. Program: Passacaglia and Fugue in C minor (Bach), Sinfonia in B flat (Johann Christian Bach), "Variations Symphoniques" (Franck), "Hungarian Fantasia" (Liszt), Excerpts from prologue and third act of "Boris Godunov" (Musorgski).

Such was the enthusiasm of the audience at yesterday's concert, the last of the season, by the National Symphony Orchestra that the frequently abused word "gala" can be applied to the occasion with a degree of accuracy. While Washingtonians were bidding au revoir to Dr. Hans Kindler and his musicians, there was no tinge of regret in the atmosphere, and what the applause expressed was appreciation of the season's work and good wishes for the Southern tour. When Dr. Kindler stepped to the podium for the final number, the musicians rose to honor him, and the audience burst into a congratulatory ovation.

Conducive to the general festivity was the presence of Percy Grainger, whose personality matches Dr. Kindler's in magnetism. The collaboration between conductor and soloist was of the kind to kindle excitement, so intent was it upon the vitalizing of music and so stimulating was its verve. The Franck variations glowed with an inner fire, and the faded Hungarian fantasy of Liszt took on fresh color.

The program was a pleasant one, well diversified and satisfying in its contrasts of style and content. Its solid foundation was the massive Passacaglia and Fugue for organ by Sebastian Bach in the orchestral transcription by Goedicke. The impressive proportions of this work gave it a grandeur almost architectural in its connotation of weight and height. That music can stimulate in this way the sensorial effects of physical materials is one of its magical properties in the hands of a master composer.

Delicate and graceful in contrast was the Sinfonia in B flat by Sebastian's youngest son, Johann Christian, historically known as the "London" Bach because of his long residence and popularity in that city. This charming work is a symphony in the original sense of a sounding-together of instruments, and an ancestor of the symphonies that Mozart was to write. It is courtly music, a little self-conscious in its graces, but attractive in its spontaneity.

Made over from the overture to an opera, the sinfonia has a dramatic vivacity in the first movement as though it were deliberately setting out to be entertaining. The slow movement is a melodic gem, lovely in its gleaming color, and the finale dances with a captivating merriment. One could not help noticing here and there certain turns of phrase and tints of the woodwinds that foreshadowed the manner of Mozart.

One is grateful to Percy Grainger for his choice of Franck's "Variations Symphoniques" which one hears too seldom, and for the poetic performance he gave them. The title of this work is misleading in that the variations play a very minor part in what is virtually a fantasia. Moreover, it is a fantasia in the vein of extemporization. The composer seems to have improvised this music as he went along, so loose is the form and so meandering the mood.

Franck has few equals in writing music that has the true feeling of improvisation. One idea grows out of another with the inevitability of logic and with the ease of meditation. The introduction to these variations seems at first purposeless, but ere long one is aware that it is leading to a definite theme. When that theme is reached it is concise as an epigram, and when Franck proceeds to play with that theme, to elaborate it in excursions of fancy, his humor has a naive and natural flavor. The sincerity of the music is unquestionable, springing directly from the composer's individuality and speaking his honesty in every phrase.

Percy Grainger treated this Franckian fantasia with his unique and hale vigor. In his playing there is a quality difficult to define: a combination of breeziness, of colonial independence, of eupeptic vim, and of innate poesy. After the intermission, he gave an electrical performance of the Liszt fantasia; the old and theatrical music came to vivid life, the virtuosic tricks seemed new and untried before, and the tinsel sparkled like genuine threads of gold.

The concert came to a clangorous close with Dr. Kindler's arrangement of the coronation scene and the duet between the false Dmitri and Marina from Musorgski's "Boris Godunov." Although the program had run a little longer than usual, the audience lingered to call Dr. Kindler back several times.

Woman Describes Rescue by Sheik In Desert Storm

How she was rescued with her companions from a blinding sand and rain storm in the Libyan desert by El Shiek of Mena, an Arabian chieftain, was described yesterday by Miss Margaret Blaine, of 2610 University place northwest.

Miss Blaine has just returned from a six-weeks' pilgrimage through Algiers, Egypt, Palestine, Gibraltar and Italy with the A. M. O. R. C. Rosicrucian study group, composed of 200 students and members of the Rosicrucian Order, a nonsectarian philosophical fraternity. The goal of the jaunt was the order's traditional headquarters in Egypt.

Near the Great Pyramid of Gizeh, the Rosicrucian party conducted a mystic sunrise ceremony, which originated, it is said, during the reign of the famed Pharoah Amenhotep IV in 1350 B. C.

Canada May Rule Munitions Industry

Ottawa, March 31 (Canadian Press).—The Canadian Government moved today to take full control over the manufacture, import and export of arms, ammunition and other war materials.

J. L. Ilsley, Minister of National Revenue, introduced a bill in the House of Commons to amend the customs act so as to give the governor-in-council wide powers over every type of traffic in implements of war.

The amendment would authorize the government to control the issuance of permits to exporters or transporters of war materials; prohibit or restrict arms exports to any destination; license makers of and traders in war materials; publish statistics on all making of and trade in such materials.

Stock Conspiracy Denied by Broker

By the Associated Press.

A partner of W. E. Hutton & Co. testified before the Securities and Exchange Commission yesterday that in 1935 he was assisted by a stock specialist in getting certain market information for his firm.

Counsel for the commission contended the action was part of an alleged conspiracy by the New York brokerage house to manipulate common stock of the Atlas Tack Corporation.

Carroll V. Green, the witness, steadfastly denied the manipulation charge and insisted the information he obtained was not in violation of the New York Stock Exchange rules making a stock specialist's book strictly confidential.

He testified that on November 22, 1935, he received on the floor of the exchange a message from Hutton's office in Detroit asking for quotations on Atlas Tack, inquiring about the size of the market, and requesting him to get the specialist's book if possible. It added that a "big order threatens."

Government Ownership Of Reserve Banks Urged

By the Associated Press.

A group of House Democrats organized yesterday to get behind legislation for Federal ownership of the 12 Federal Reserve banks.

Representative Binderup, of Nebraska, elected executive secretary of the group, said the 88 who attended the meeting would be listed as co-authors of the bill introduced.

"We want Federal ownership of the 12 Federal Reserve banks in order to control the volume of money and credit," Binderup said. "In this way it will be possible to avoid inflation and deflation."

Margaret Sullavan says Luckies are the answer for her throat

"I am not sure which is more critical—a Broadway audience or the movie microphones. At any rate, whether in Hollywood or New York, an actress has to be certain that her performances are always up to the peak. And that means being careful of the voice and throat. That's why, though I enjoy smoking thoroughly, I try to use judgment in the cigarette I choose. When I first began smoking, Luckies were my choice, because I found this light smoke advisable for my throat. And that's as true today as ever. Luckies are still my standby."

Margaret Sullavan

An independent survey was made recently among professional men and women—lawyers, doctors, lecturers, scientists, etc. Of those who said they smoke cigarettes, more than 87% stated they personally prefer a light smoke.

Miss Sullavan verifies the wisdom of this preference, and so do other leading artists of the radio, stage, screen and opera. Their voices are their fortunes. That's why so many of them smoke Luckies. You, too, can have the throat protection of Luckies—a light smoke, free of certain harsh irritants removed by the exclusive process "It's Toasted". Luckies are gentle on the throat.

MARY HAWORTH'S MAIL

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I think that "Perplexed," a bachelor in his late twenties, is indeed unfortunate in his selection of women for "just friends." But I can assure him that not every girl who goes out with a single man wants to marry him. Take my own case, for instance. I am very interested in a young man who is very fine, but due to his work I can't see him during the week.. Now I see no reason why I should sit at home and twiddle my thumbs—and neither does he. I am perfectly willing to go out with other men to shows or for dinner and dancing. But the average man thinks he has to make love to me if I accept such invitations, and he is insulted if I don't jump at the chance to go to his apartment to see his "etchings."

* * * * *

Not only that, but most (or perhaps I should say, some) men inform you that there are too many girls willing to "play the game"; and who do I think I am that a man should take me out just for the pleasure of my company! The average man can sit down and talk to other men intelligently, but when he takes a girl out, do you think he will talk to her with any degree of intelligence? Horrors, the woman's mad!

* * * * *

"Perplexed" does not state just what he expects of this "platonic friendship," but if he is just looking for some nice attractive young girl to share an evening's entertainment with him, then I see no reason why he should have any trouble finding that person. I suppose this letter will bring a storm of protest, but at least it will not be on my head.

* * * *

She Praises 'Perplexed.'

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Your column always proved of the greatest interest to me because of your thoughtfulness and clear-cut spirit. Most often I agree with your decisions and comments. However, your answer to the letter written by "Perplexed" amused me. I thoroughly agree with him concerning platonic friendship between men and women. To my mind, he is being a realist. This idea is still prevalent in the minds of many.

* * * *

Many women, I for one, turn in distaste from men who think because they have had a few dates with a girl that they have some "strings" on her, rather than from men like "Perplexed," who make it plain from the start that they are not interested in getting married. I think it commendable of "Perplexed" to admit his non-marrying intent rather than put on a false front. I am pleased to know such a person still exists. I hope my sentiments can be brouvht to his attention. MISS PERPLEXITY.

* * * *

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: I read with considerable interest your reply to 'Perplexed" in Monday's column. Perhaps it's the obscure perception of the male in such matters, but as I do not completely understand your attitude, I am writing in the hope that more light may be shed upon an interesting subject—and perhaps more truth.

Truly, I don't believe you understood the question raised by "Perplexed." No one denies, from Genesis to your column of March 29, that "male and female created He them," and that a strong element in the social interchange between the sexes, particularly in youth, does have as its unvoiced, explicit end and aim the possibility of matrimony. But that wasn't what "Perplexed" was discussing. With all due deference to the legitimate interests of a girl seeking a husband, don't you think you are a bit strong in your condemnation of friendships mistakenly called "platonic?"

If my analysis has any foundation, it seems to me that what man, as a race, seeks is understanding and companionship from his fellows. And strangely enough the disinterested affection which we call friendship grows when we find it. As a man, I understand far more clearly how men's minds work than I understand women's thought processes, but I believe friendship usually springs from similarity of mind. From what women friends have told me, I feel quite sure this is the case with women as with men. And granting the fact that the sexes are complementary, and admitting the difficulties of adjustment, it does happen occasionally that a man and woman find, without passion, that friendship which Shakespeare calls "the marriage of true minds."

Now, and here I come to the crux of my argument (and the reply which it seems to me in fairness you should have made to a nice boy), the rules are simple for friendship. Insofar as you approach to impersonal, unselfish and unself-conscious interest in another human being, male or female, that interest engenders affection. Being cared for, we care in turn for the person who feels for us, and the harmonious development of friendship begins. The quality of friendship between man and woman is different from that between persons of the same sex, but the technique of achieving it is the same.

I fear that your reply to "Perplexed" gave no help to anyone. You practically told girls to get a good meal ticket; and the boy who wrote you that that is what he should expect. It may be, of course, that I have misinterpreted entirely, but if so, I should appreciate correction and, in any case, shall read what you have to say with interest. And now a word as to myself—I am 29, unmarried, and unless I am greatly deceived, write from experience, though, naturally, my practice is not always equal to my profession! Although I am no golden-mouthed orator, may I conclude this little homily with an expression of sincere admiration for the excellence of your column? CHRYSOSTOM.

Our Position Defended.

DEAR CHRYSOSTOM: My reply must be brief, as I am giving correspondents' opinions right of way in today's column. But if you will reread "Perplexed's" letter you will find he asked one question and one only, and that one simple, direct and easy to understand: "Why is it that platonic friendship between men and women seems to be 'gone with the wind?'" I could, of course, have begged the question by assuring him that it still exists in a fashion here and there, as it no doubt does; or I could have extolled at length certain spiritual and intellectual satisfactions presumably accruing from sexless comradeship between the sexes; or I could have sermonized against boldly mate-seeking women and particularly against maneuvering parents (as he no doubt hoped I would), but I thought it best to deal directly with his injured air in placing the question.

Whoever seeks sexless comradeship with the opposite sex has my blessing in his search; I hold no particular brief against such association; it may serve the whole need of many men and women; but my only purpose in replying as I did was to acquaint "Perplexed" with the idea that he is swimming against, rather than with, the current of life in seeking "to be friendly with an unattached woman over a period of months or years and still have no matrimonial intentions." M. H.

Shoulder Bouquet Of Violets Popular

Fragrant purple violets are still as popular as they were in grandmother's day. While grandmother probably wore them in a heavy arrangement at her waist or primly carried them in her hands, they are used in a variety of novel ways by modern flower stylists.

The latest idea for wearing these shy little sparklers is a long, tapering cluster arrangement that resembles a bunch of luscious grapes, with curling tendrils to carry out the effect. Instead of a tightly packed bunch of oval shape, the flowers are assembled loosely and gracefully, so the effect is a soft drapery-like appearance. This type of shoulder bouquet is either suitable for dinner or evening wear, and what could be more appropriate for the cocktail hour!

The rich tones of violet are most effective on gowns of yellow and light spring greens, the illustrated cluster being worn on a gold-encrusted crepe of warm yellow, or they will make good contrast on any light-colored gown.

Maryland Co-eds Make Many Food Experiments So Tables Will Be Safe for Future Husbands

At the University of Maryland, the students in home economics do their experimenting in class instead of waiting to learn the art of cooking after they are married. Future husbands rejoice—you won't have to look forward to tough steak and hard biscuits. Here Helen Stolzenbach, Betty Norris and Flora Waldman try their skill at deep-fat frying.

Scientific Research Directed Toward Making Pie Crust Flaky.

MEN WHO MARRY girls from the University of Maryland, School of Home Economics, will never complain about having to eat soggy biscuits or tough steak—or at least they shouldn't. Here, the girls do their experimenting in class instead of risking the loss of a husband.

Experiments are worked on simple things as boiling water, but the most successful ways of preparing omelets and souffles are also found. New and old ways of preparing tea, gelatine, tough and tender cuts of meat, white and colored vegetables, pie crust and biscuit dough and cake batters are tried.

Men complain about coffee. It is hard to make this beverage to suit them. In cooking class, the young women learn to make coffee in the scientific manner but in a way that is practical for home use.

Cooking Bacon.

It has been found that a hot skillet does not always fry the best bacon and tedious kneading just doesn't "go" with flaky pie crust. These future homekeepers know that you should not remove the skin from red beets before cooking, unless they want their beets to become white and the cooking liquid a deep red.

If you have a husband who complains that "your cooking is not like mother's," perhaps the results of this experimentation will interest you.

By experimenting, it has been found that tea put in freshly boiling water has a mild flavor and strength, a good color and a medium amount of tannin. Tea added to hot water and allowed to stand, has a flat flavor, light color and is weak.

The standard coffee product has a clear appearance, a full coffee flavor and a medium body. It is prepared by placing pulverized coffee on a filter paper of a tricolator. Pour over this boiling water. Let the container stand on an indirect fire until the coffee is filtered. This will keep the beverage hot.

Bacon that is started cooking in a cold pan at a low temperature until golden brown has little curling, a sweet flavor and leaves clear gold drippings. If a hot pan is used, there is much curling and the meat is dry.

You may not realize it but there is a great difference in the results of fruit prepared in different ways. Apples cooked at a medium temperature in a casserole take longer to cook but keep their shape, have a mellow but firm texture and are rather sweet in flavor—(if they are sweet to begin with). Apples boiled rapidly in water lose some of their shape, are soft and tender but have a more tart taste. If they are cooked in a double boiler, they are apt to have a flat taste.

By all means soak your dried fruit before cooking it. Soaking the fruit for 24 hours instead of one hour increases the size and flavor. Likewise, if you soak fresh lettuce for 24 hours in cold water it will be more crisp than if only soaked for a short time. Salt is better absorbed by vegetables if it is allowed to stand on the food for a length of time before cooking or serving.

How do you poach an egg? Do you cook it so it is stringy and tough, or is it light and fluffy, as it should be? According to the class experiments, here is the best way to poach an egg: Drop it in water at about 176 degrees Fahrenheit and remove from the flame. Let the egg remain in the water till it is sufficiently coagulated for personal likes.

The girls prepare custards and cakes, varying slightly the amount of egg, milk, sugar or leavening agent to get the best results.

Hints on Cheese.

Cheese cooked in a double boiler over warm water is more tender and soft than cheese heated in a hot frying pan. In the latter method the food is tough and the fat breaks down.

In frying meat, salt it well, sear it in a hot pan quickly on all sides, then continue cooking at a lowered temperature until done. This will make the meat tender, dry, brown and of a good flavor. The gravy is stronger this way.

Batter for timbales should be golden brown, medium fine in texture and of very good flavor.

In making standard cake batter, mix and sift the dry ingredients, beat the eggs thoroughly, add the milk, the melted fat, and, lastly, the flavoring. Mix the wet and dry ingredients together and beat vigorously. Bake at about 355 degrees Fahrenheit until done. This cake will increase in volume, have a fine brown crust and a fine texture.

A better biscuit is baked as soon as it is made rather than left to stand. In these the layers are more tender and smooth. Dough that has little handling is more flaky and tender than the dough that is worked.

Classroom Hints For Young Brides

Fry bacon slowly in a not too hot pan for best results.

Cook fruits at a medium temperature if you want them to retain their shape and flavor.

Do not break the skin on beets before cooking them if you wish them to retain their red color.

Cheese melted in a double boiler over hot water is more tender than cheese melted in a hot frying pan.

TODAY'S HEALTH TALK

By Dr. Logan Clendening.

I pointed out yesterday that the regular annual 300,000 outbreak of whooping cough in the United States reaches its peak in April and leaves a mortality of 6,000 in its wake. That is enough to make one regard it as a serious disease.

All the more have public health officials been watching the progress in preventive vaccination against whooping cough. Dr. Louis Sauer, of Evanston, Ill., began enthusiastically to prove, about 1925, that he could wipe whooping cough off the face of the earth. He has been at it ever since. At first his work was regarded with skepticism. Public health workers were not all convinced that the germ he was working with was the real cause of whooping cough.

Dr. Sauer continued, however, to gather facts. He started a series of experiments to prove his point. He began by giving vaccine against whooping cough to only one child in a family. But all the children went to school. In the course of time, whooping cought would hit the school. Finally, Dr. Sauer had this kind of record to show: In 25 families, 32 children had been vaccinaed, had gone through an epidemic of whooping cough in their schools, and had not contracted it, while 31 of their brothers and sisters, similarly exposed, all came down with it.

Seems to Clinch Case.

The final, and what seems to be the clinching case, was of four brothers near the same age. The two youngest were vaccinated against whooping cough, the two oldest were not. When the epidemic of whooping cough came along the two unvaccinated boys came down with it right away. The two vaccinated ones lived in the same house with the infected brothers all through the attack and had absolutely no symptoms or discomfort whatever. This observation is so convincing because all of them were living under the same conditions of hygiene, eating the same food, etc.

It takes some time to make the observations on such things. You cannot just say that if a child is vaccinated and doesn't take the disease in a year, it is immunized. It may not have been exposed. But now Dr. Sauer has careful records, 11 years in duration, which seems to me to prove conclusively that he has actually found a way to prevent this dreadful scourge.

Prompt Action Advised.

Inasmuch as it affects young infants, it is best to give the immunization before the second half-year. Dr. Sauer, recognizing that it is not advisable to attempt to immunize against several diseases simultaneously, suggests the following plan: Immunize against whooping cough during the second half year; against diphtheria four months later, against smallpox four months later still.

The immunization requires three doses of vaccine at intervals of one week. No bad symptoms have ever followed an injection.

Expert Offers Aids to Child's Concentration

Mother Warned Dragging Him Off to Bed Is Injurious.

By the Associated Press.

New York.—If a youngster beseeches his mother to put off bedtime for five minutes while he finishes a book, he isn't being obstinate. He's just concentrating.

And the mother who drags him off protesting is not doing her duty, but really is damaging her child's concentration ability.

These conclusions, by Miss Mary Gutteridge, of Melbourne, Australia, are the root of what she calls an international problem in child behavior. Miss Gutteridge is principal of Melbourne's Kindergarten Training College, and is continuing at Columbia University studies in children's concentration she already has pursued in Switzerland, Austria, Australia, Germany, France and England.

Because the habit of concentration is so important throughout life, Miss Gutteridge believes in emphasizing it in childhood, when habits are acquired most easily.

Decries Rigid Schedules.

"The parent who insists on imposing a rigid schedule on his child distracts him from the completion of his games, and makes it increasingly difficult for him to apply himself as he grows older," she explains.

"Though to an adult he appears to be playing aimlessly, he is really working hard toward some goal, which may never be reached if continued interruptions discourage him."

Miss Gutteridge chides the mother who insists that Bobby pick up all his toys at the end of the day. Toys should be left untouched, she holds, until he is ready to resume play. If they are disturbed, the child must painstakingly begin all over again to work out his play scheme.

Need for Playmates.

Her study of hundreds of children in half a dozen countries has convinced Miss Gutteridge that they concentrate for greater lengths of time when playing with other children. One child acts as a stimulus for another. If teachers or parents always have a suggestion ready, she believes, they can sustain the child's interest in a game almost indefinitely.

Miss Gutteridge has found that certain types of toys hold a child's attention longer than others.

"Blocks and dolls will last all through childhood and carpentry tools take on prolonged interest in the fourth and fifth years.

"Why not buy a few of these substantial toys for children instead of a quantity of useless gadgets of which they soon tire?"

Helpful Sewing Hint.

If you are sewing with black thread, it is a good idea to wear a white apron. It makes the work easier on the eyes and lessens the strain. Conversely, when sewing on white, a black apron is advisable.

A WOMAN'S NEW YORK

By Alice Hughes.

ALICE HUGHES.

ABOUT this time each annum we New York girls get spring well up our nostrils and begin thinking about the birds and the bees and the flowers—especially about the dear little flower.

But we are sharply divided on the subject of the posies, according to our various habitats. Our suburbanites, the garden light in their eyes, are crowding the seed stores in search of the proper ingredients for the backyard plot and the borders for the front lawn. We Manhattanites, on the other hand, are hardly aware that flowers emerge from the soil. We imagine that they sprout from the skulls of smart ladies to decorate their hair-do's, or spring in full bloom from belts, shoulders and lapels.

Thus my flower consciousness drives me at once to beauteous blonde Irene Hayes, who functions as our leading flower stylist in her Park avenue orchid-shoppe. I say, "Well, Irene old posy-monger, what's blossoming this spring on heads and frocks?" And Irene tells me.

Tells me, this week, that flowers for the hair are still very chic, especially small yellow and white orchids. That carnations, bright red or pink, are just the thing to tuck in dress girdles this season. That the men folks still stick to cornflower boutonnieres for day, but consider the deep red carnation the thing to liven up somber evening wear. Fresh flowers are growing in popularity as hat ornaments, too, adroitly tied up with the costume.

Irene has a new flower from South Africa called—take a breath—the Chinkerinchee, the hardiest of all cut blooms. Takes three weeks to arrive; will last three more. All right, Irene, but I still intend to see a flower growing right out of the ground this spring, if I can find one!

* * * *

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—I took our young Martin to the Cole Brothers' Circus at the Hippodrome the other afternoon, just to get the season off on the right foot. It's a good show, with all the big features concentrated in one ring. Martin howled at the clowns; I shuddered at Clyde Beatty's snapping cats, and my spouse, for some reason, concentrated on the 40 (count 'em) Harem Beauties . . .

* * * *

The waterfront suddenly rages with activity as the Hudson breezes warm up. Hard on the Normandie's first sailing, I saw the Rex take out 733 passengers the other day, with Mrs. Burke Roche as name No. 1—all headed for "Sunny Italy," as it seems to be called . . .

* * * *

Another link between old New York and new has been broken by the Reaper. Miss Frances E. White has just passed away at the age of 89—in the very home in Brooklyn Heights where she has lived since it was built in '57! Almost incredible, isn't it? We hear so much of the Jenny-Come-Latelies in Gotham life that we fail to remember that such venerable ties with the great past still live among us! . . .

* * * *

The dynamic Ruth E. Collins, who superintends our Women's House of Detention, the big calaboose in Greenwich Village, tells me she has thought up a new stunt to pacify the naughty girls incarcerated there. She has formed a glee club, an esthetic dancing group and a "body poise" class, and reports very good results in achieving morale. I can't help wondering if any of Ruth's incorrigibles bust out, now and then, in a song which is not precisely uplifting! . . .

* * * *

The nobility of all lands pops up in all sorts of places here. For instance, the other day I met the Baroness von Turk Taylor in our biggest and best known department store. She's an assistant buyer there, after having toiled her way through all the grades from salesgirl. The baroness' American marriage soured, and she hurled herself into the marts of trade. Speak kindly to the waiter—he's a Tsarist general.

First Lady Is Honored By 73d Club

Stories of Trip Through Southwest Told by Mrs. Rooseveltt.

Spring flowers, hats and frocks dominated the scene yesterday afternoon at the luncheon given by the Seventy-Third Club in honor of the First Lady, Mrs. Roosevelt, who was received by Mrs. Richard Duncan, president, and members of the board, wore a dress of hyacinth blue and silver, with a broad-brimmed black hat trimmed with a white flower.

Mrs. Duncan was in a frock of blue of the same shade and wore with it a broad, plum-colored straw. Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, who was a guest of Mrs. Edward C. Moran, wore a black and white print dress and a small black hat with a row of white daisies trimming the front of the narrow brim. Mrs. Henry A. Wallace, wife of the Secretary of Agriculture, who was the guest of Mrs. Fred Biermann, of Maine, was in a costume suit of navy blue.

Flowers in Profusion.

Three large bouquets decorated the head table, and smaller ones were on tables for the other guests. There were Japanese iris, Easter lilies, snapdragons, daffodils, gladioli, roses and carnations—flowers repeated in the designs on print dresses and the trimming of new spring hats.

Mrs. Daniel A. Reed, president of the Congressional Club, another guest of honor, wore a navy blue print, figured in white, with a brood-brimmed hat to match. Others at the head table were Mrs. Biermann, chairman of arrangements for the luncheon; Mrs. Brooks Fletcher, who read two of her original poems as part of the program; Mrs. Moran, Mrs. Michael K. Reilly, Mrs. C. W. Turner, Mrs. Dow W. Harter, Mrs. Lawrence E. Imhoff, Mrs. Frank L. Kloeb, Mrs. J. Buell Snyder, Mrs. Martin F. Smith and Mrs. Thomas J. Strickler, of Kansas City, soprano.

Mrs. Strickler, who has sung in Washington before, both at the Congressional Club and with the National Symphony Orchestra, sang a group of four numbers, accompanied at the piano by Mr. Louis Goosman, of the Marine Band. They included "Peter Pan" (Strikles), "Little Star" (LaForge), "Sempre Libre" from "La Traviata" (Verdi), and "The Wren" (Bishop), which she did with a flute obligato, played by Mr. Clayton Lindsey A. small orchestra from the Marine Band also played during the luncheon.

First Lady Speaks.

Mrs. Fletcher's poems were "Give and Live" and "Thoughts."

Mrs. Roosevelt, who has been guest of honor at the Seventy-Third Club's luncheon each year since it was organized, told amusing incidents of her recent trip through the Southwest. She related how her son, "Jimmy," telephoned to Oklahoma after it was reported in the papers that she carried a gun when motoring alone, and someone in Alabama had decided she should be arrested for carrying concealed weapons when she arrived in the State; about the 54 boxes of flowers sent her by students in one college town where she stopped; how the chairman of a program had told her she would rather have her shake hands with those in the audience than to deliver her lecture if she had not time to do both; and of the woman whom she had befriended, who hitch-hiked to Houston to meet her and was the first person to greet her when she stepped from the train.

Mrs. Roosevelt left immediately after the luncheon for a drive to Mount Vernon.

By Marylyn.

When we heard of the party which the Alanson B. Houghtons are giving Saturday in their Massachusetts avenue home for the Literary Society of Washington, we couldn't help but think a bit about this grand old organization, by far the most exclusive one in many a square mile 'round here. In fact, Mary Roberts Rinehart said it was "the most interesting and unique" society.

Way back in the days when Washingtonians were frantically asking one another for the latest news from the Civil War front, and how much longer it could last, a group of optomists, who could see farther than the next few years, decided there was entirely too much war, and not enough literary interest—people were fast becoming thinkers in terms of bullets, bandages, charges, "Marches Through Georgia," and what not—so the Literary Society of Washington saw the light of day. One of the most active members was Miss Seward, daughter of the Seward of Mr. Lincoln's Cabinet.

Both President Garfield and President Theodore Roosevelt were enthusiastic members of the L. S. of W. and insisted upon the meetings being at the White House during their time. History repeated itself last year, when our present First Lady was introduced to the club, and, in her usual cordial, thoughtful way, entertained the members at 1600 Pennsylvania avenue.

Until last year, one of the original members, Little Miss McBlair, was living and an ardent follower of the meetings. Not so long ago, some of the members whose ancestors were among the founders, conceived the idea of holding a gathering that would hark back to the days of the past, so after much scurrying about in attics and hunting through queer little hump-topped trunks, costumes were unearthed (many of them being the same that had been worn to meetings long ago), and in those the members appeared.

Saw Ernst Wilhelm Meyer, of the German Embassy, enjoying himself in the patio of the Carlton the other evening. He and an attractive young lady, modishly garbed in black, were sitting way back at one of the tables against the wall, and even the rhythm of the music failed to lure them away from their engrossing conversation.

* * * *

Mme. Pelenyi, wife of the Hungarian Minister, was making some afternoon calls when we saw her the other day going up the steps of a house on R street. She was attired in dark blue, with a small close-fitting hat on her smoothly coiffed head.

* * * *

The Tuggles, Dick and Marge, chose L'Escargot for dinner one evening this week. Marge had on a good looking sports outfit of a grayish-beige wool with a narrow brimmed felt hat of the same shade pulled down over her brown curls. Dick, who is to go back to sea duty after some time ashore (the Navy is full of chances at just about this time) was all excited about the New Mexico, the ship he is slated for.

* * * *

Betty Astin and Marjorie Landa are two very chic young matrons. We caught a glimpse of them recently. Betty was in black, with a detachable cape lined with white pique, and a small black straw hat, the crown of which was entirely of tiny white blossoms. Her companion, who was the first Capitalite to try this new turned-under bob (she should stick to it, it is so very becoming), was in a soft wool frock of rose-copper fastened down the front with round hoop buttons of gold. Her brown felt hat was a modified beret, jutting out at startling, but smart angles.

Saw the Ambassador of Ecuador and Mme. Alfaro having luncheon at the Army and Navy Club the other day. She was costumed in black, her frock of simple design and her hat of beret style with a single quill sticking straight up.

Two gentlemen, busily talking, stopping in the Pall Mall Room of the Raleigh, had all they could do to give their refreshments the attention due them, take care of the topics of the day and lend an occasional ear to the music. One was the dapper Senator Marcus A. Coolidge.

Boston Man to Wed Miss Ashlyn Cannon

Mr. Draper was graduated in 1932 from Harvard, where he was a member of Hasty Pudding, Institute of 1770 and Spee. He is also a member of the Harvard, Tennis and Racquet and Somerset clubs, all of Boston.

Mrs. Roberta Campbell Lawson, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs, is at the Waldorf Astoria Hotel in New York.

Miss Janet Brown Engaged to Pastor

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Ayres Brown, of Silver Spring, Md., have announced the engagement of their daughter, Miss Janet Brown, to the Rev. Whitney Maynard Trousdale, son of Mrs. Samuel Whitney Trousdale, of Rome, Pa., and the late Dr. Trousdale.

Mr. Lowell Mason Offers Evening of Grieg Music

By Jessie Ash Arndt.

Mr. Lowell Mason last night was host at another of the music parties at which he has entertained this season—a dinner in Wesley Hall for 60 guests.

"Edvard Grieg" was guest of honor and a dramatic incident in his career—his visit to Paris after having denounced the stand of the French government in the Dreyfus case—was dramatized during the evening.

The guests had been sent, with the invitations to the dinner, letters presenting Grieg's side of the controversy and that of those organized to oppose him when he arrived to play his famous A minor concerto with the Paris Symphony Orchestra while feeling against him ran high there.

Wesley Hall became for the evening the cafe where Grieg was denounced when he entered preceding his concert. After the guests were seated, Mrs. Charles Helsper entered in the role of a flower vender singing "Who'll Buy My Lavender" and distributing bouquets to the ladies in the party. Mr. Mason made a few introductory remarks, turning time back to 1903, when Grieg went to Paris, and Federal Trade Commissioner Ewin L. Davis, one of the guests, made a brief explanation of the controversy.

Mr. Sullivan Jones, in the role of a patriotic Frenchman, denounced Grieg as he entered the room. Mr. Philip Baxter, young Washington tenor, had the part of Grieg and was dressed to represent the great composer. Two nieces, who accompanied him, were portrayed by Miss Julia Yarnell and Miss Mabel Walker Willebrandt, also in costumes of the period.

Mr. Joseph O'Connell, Assistant Attorney General, took the part of a defender of Grieg, urging that he be judged as a compoker rather than as a politician, and that his music be allowed to speak for him. "Solvieg's Song," "Nocturne" and "Ich Liebe dich," which was sung by Mrs. Baxter, were among the compositions presented.

The high point of the program was when Mrs. Mabel Walker Willebrandt introduced Miss Rose d'Amore, concert pianist of Washington, who impersonated Raola Pugno, the famous pianist of Grieg's day, and presented a brilliant rendition of the A minor Concerto. She wore an ashes of roses gown and her fair hair in a braid about her head.

One of the interesting sidelights of the party was Mr. Lyle Brookover taking the part of M. Edouard Colonne, director of the Paris Symphony Orchestra and discussing the present trend of "ragtime" music in America, referring to the latest songs, such as "The Bird on Nellie's Hat," "In the Good Old Summertime" and "I Just Can't Make My Eyes Behave."

Among other guests were the First Assistant Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Oscar Chapman; Lieut. Comdr. and Mrs. S. W. Hogan, Senator and Mrs. Gerald Nye, Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Cappel, Mrs. Gertrude Lyons, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Yarnall, Mr. and Mrs. Karl Hoffman, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. MacWilliams, Miss Betty Baum, Miss Sally Turner, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O'Connell, Mr. Walter S. Studdiford, Miss Anne Kendrick, Mr. Joseph Ulmer, Miss Gladys Redman, Mr. and Mrs. William Mearns, Mr. and Mrs. Richard J. Carr, Miss Laura Brookover, Mr. and Mrs. Sam Jones, and Mr. and Mrs. Richard P. Whiteley.

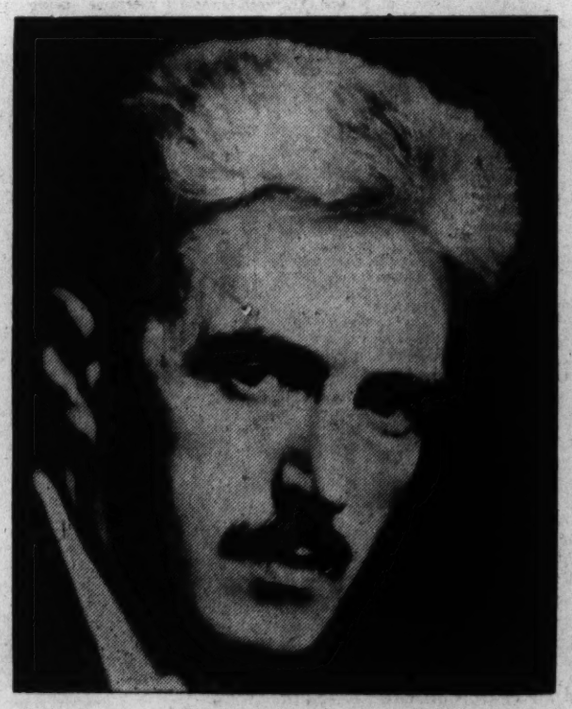
Announcing the return of
DASHIELL HAMMETT
Creator of The Thin Man, greatest writer of modern detective fiction



A series of amazing short novels, bringing back to a clamorous public Dashiell Hammett's unparalleled modern detective character, Continental Operative No. 7, made famous in RED HARVEST and THE BIG KNOCKOVER.

All written in the staccato, machine-gun prose that electrified the critics and brought paeans of praise from the literary bigwigs.

Dashiell Hammett is a giant among the writers of modern detective fiction. None knows so well as he the inner workings of the underworld. Himself a veteran Pinkerton detective, he writes authentically, drawing a vividly real picture of the far-flung dynasties of the czars of crime, and revealing the liaisons of crime and the law, the everyday lives of gangster and moll, the stark realities of life among the men and women outside the law.

Bowie Track Opens Spring Racing Season in Maryland Today

Ring Heads Place Ban On Twomey

Gevinson's Manager Is Suspended for Six Months by Body.

He Will Not Be Able to Pilot Fighter or Guard Team.

By Bill McCormick.

Matt Twomey, coach of the National Guard boxing team, who has been in boiling water practically since the start of the District A. A. U. boxing tournament, was suspended for six months as the tourney came to a close at Turner's Arena last night.

The action was taken by unanimous vote of all three members of the Boxing Commission, who acted on the matter at the ringside. The ban was placed on Twomey for refusing to allow the bandages of Eddie Saugstad, his 118-pound entry, to be examined.

The suspension becomes effective today and runs until October 1. It probably will have an important bearing on the future of Lou Gevinson, a featherweight professional, who is managed by Twomey.

While Gevinson is not under suspension, his manager will not be allowed to transact any business for him or to work with him in the corner until the ban is lifted. Twomey and Gevinson had figured on big things during the coming outdoor season.

The suspension also will keep Twomey from working with his guard team in dual meets.

Twomey Demands Hearing.

The suspension will become effective in States affiliated with the National Boxing Association upon request of the District Commission.

Twomey was allowed to work with those of his fighters who had not finished their stints in the tournament. He said he would file application today for a hearing before the commission.

"No boxing commission official asked to examine Eddie's hands before we got in the ring," he said, throwing the lie directly in the face of those in charge. "We cut the bandages off immediately when we were told to in the ring. I did not refuse to unwrap the bandages before we got in the ring."

"I think the commission acted too rapidly. I was not given a hearing. I don't see how I can be suspended without being heard."

Twomey already was facing possible punishment by the commissioners for entering the ring during the Saugstad-Jim Koustenas fiasco last week when last night's trouble started.

Coach Jim McNamara and his assistant, Natie Brown, of the Jewish Community Center, asked that Saugstad's hands be examined before he entered the ring against Ray Morse. Brown claimed that Saugstad's right hand — his best punching weapon—was injured and that Twomey had used far too much tape to protect it.

Twomey Refuses.

Twomey refused their request, then flatly told Commission officials that he not only would not allow Saugstad's hands to be examined, but would take his fighter out of the tournament if they insisted upon the examination.

Commissioner Kenneth Parkinson then ordered Twomey to allow the wrapping to be examined, or be suspended. Twomey cut the bandages off, tossed the covering of the left hand to a commission inspector and then, it is charged, gave the bandage from the disputed right hand to a helper to be kept away from the officials.

Fighting without bandages, Saugstad battered Morse into submission in 2 minutes and 25 seconds of the third round. The first round was fairly even, but Eddie's big guns weakened Ray in the second.

Tourney Packed With Action.

Twomey had difficulty with bandaging in Gevinson's third—and last to date—professional fight. Before that bout Ray Arcel, one of the best handlers in the business, made Twomey wrap Lou's hands a number of times before it was done to his satisfaction.

The tournament, as a whole, was packed with action that more than satisfied the 2,000 customers.

12,000 Fans to See $5,000 Rowe Event

Speed To Spare, Zoic and Rudie Expected to Draw Chief Play in Feature; Post Time for First Race 2:30 P. M.; Full Fields Named.

By Walter Haight.

On a hilltop, some 18 miles out in Prince Georges County, where somebody's forefathers made a clearing in the dense pinewoods hoping to gain a plow-hold in New America, racing fans will gather this afternoon hoping to gain a wallet-hold on the money that will be played into the mutuel machines. All of which, is taking the long way to report that horse racing begins at Bowie.

At 2:30 p. m. the barrier bell is scheduled to send the first field galloping toward the imaginary finish wire and with that action the cycle of the sport of kings and other fellows will be under way in Maryland, April Fools Day to the contrary. Providing the good weather is a willing helper, Bowie expects to be host to a crowd of 12,000.

Eleven thoroughbreds are entered in the $5,000 added Rowe Memorial Handicap, a 6-furlong feature for 3-year-olds and upward.

The Bowie meeting will last nine days and offers $73,000 in purses. The horses move next to Havre de Grace and from there to Pimlico and other Eastern tracks.

Approximately 1,000 horses are quartered here, with recent arrivals from California and Southern tracks augmenting those which wintered in the North. They represent almost every prominent owner.

Alfred G. Vanderbilt's Speed to Spare, Enger Stable's Zoic, W. H. Gallagher's Rudie, and Araho Stable's Mucho Gusto are among the early favorites in the Rowe Memorial.

Other entries include E. K. Bryson's Honey Cloud, Shandon Farm's Quincy and My Elsie, A. C. Compton's Weston, T. F. Sword's Vote Boy, Bomar Stable's Billy Bee and Araho Stable's New Deal.

Zoic has raced in Florida during the winter with success. Quincy was fourth in the Louisiana Derby a few days ago. Speed to Spare and Weston raced well at the California tracks. Vote Boy and Mucho Gusto campaigned in Florida. Rudie is expected to draw strong backing.

A 5½-furlong race for 3-year-old fillies, is among the other opening day events. All but the feature will offer $1,000 purses. Post time for the first race is 2:30 (Eastern standard time).

Track Superintendent Richard Pending reports the racing strip in good shape and General Manager Joseph B. Boye predicts a successful season if Bowie gets a break in the weather.

Numerous Government and Congressional dignitaries, as well as Washington and Baltimore society folk, are expected for the opening.

Three other feature races are scheduled during the meeting topped by the closing day Southern Maryland $5,000 added handicap for 3-year-olds and upward at 11-16 miles.

Gainer Upsets Rudolph In Billiard Title Play

New York, March 31 (AP).—Fay Gainer, of Vineland, N. J., playing in his first title tournament, produced the second major upset of the world's pocket billiard championship today when he upset the Cleveland veteran, Erwin Rudolph, 125 to 82 in 30 innings.

Selections at Bowie.

Dear Al:

Good time, Florida; better time, Bowie. The horses move right up to Washington's side door this afternoon. Until we get a race track of our own, we will have to string along with the show the Southern Maryland Agricultural Association offers. The firm hasn't done so bad, either. Lots of horses in the fields and some improvements. Although the 2-year-old field did not fill, the program packs a punch in the Rowe Memorial and there should be plenty of action down where the betting in conducted. General Manager Joseph E. Boyle would liked to have had yesterday's beautiful day and he went to bed last night pleading with the Weather Man. He expects a great gathering of beautiful women and handsome men—but he will be satisfied if the iron men show up in gobs and gobs. Boyle likes the gate, but it's the rustle of the bills through the windows that is the chief music to his heart. Looks like I was crossed up. The new fence around Bowie just circles the track and leaves the stables out in the cruel, cruel world where they were when the vandals worked. However, the track has promised ample guards. See you on the rail.

Nats Seeking Vosmik, Browns Want Bolton

By Shirley Povich.

A Staff Correspondent.

Orlando, Fla., March 31.—Clark Griffith, scenting pennant possibilities in his Washington Ball Club, is frantically attempting to purchase a right-handed hitting outfielder, it was learned today.

The Nats' owner, impatient at Freddie Sington's failure to hit exhibition game pitching with any great degree of success and believing his club to be a serious pennant threat if it can acquire one more acceptable outfielder, is bidding for three players in the hope of landing one.

The chief object of Griffith's intentions is Joe Vosmik, of the St. Louis Browns. Failing in his attempt to buy Vosmik, Griffith may purchase Ray Bell, of the same team.

Griffith's long-shot hope is that the Nats will come into possession of Tommy Henrich, of the Milwaukee club, who may be declared a free agent by Commissioner Landis on the strength of Henrich's protest that Cleveland by sending him to its Milwaukee farm is hindering his advancement to the major leagues.

Commissioner Landis is expected to rule this week on the case of Henrich, who was the ace outfielder of the American Association last season and who had been expected to graduate to the major leagues.

The Nats' owner is prepared to bid high for Henrich's services if

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Orlando, Fla., March 31.—The St. Louis Browns are bidding for Cliff Bolton, the Nats' vanishing catcher, it was learned tonight.

Owner Clark Griffith, of the Washington Club admitted that the St. Louis team had been in communication with Bolton, who retired to his High Point, N. C., home two weeks ago without the formality of notifying the Nats of his departure from training camp.

"I don't know yet what kind of a deal we can make, whether the Browns want to buy for cash or give us players, said Griffith.

"They asked me if Bolton would play for the Barowns and I told them he would. That's all I know, thus far."

Griffith's admission that the St. Louis club is seeking the services of the stocky Washington catcher follows on the heels of a reliable report that the Nats are bidding for a St. Louis outfielder.

The Nats owner is known to be angling for either Joe Vosmik or Roy Bell of the Browns, but it was believed that he was attempting to buy them outright for cash. The recently developed Bolton angle presages the catcher's use in a trade.

Friction between Bolton and the Nats' bosses has been noted for two years. Last September the catcher jumped the team without notice and he repeated the stunt here at the trading camp, declaring that he did not want to play for Washington.

Cooper 9-1 Choice as $5,000 Augusta Golf Play Starts Today

Jones, Smith, Dudley Also Are Liked

Field of 46 to Tee Off in Golf's 'World Series' in 72-Hole Play.

By the Associated Press.

Augusta, Ga., March 31.—On the eve of golf's nearest approach to a world series, 38 ranking professionals, 7 amateurs and business man competitor, Robert T. Jones, jr., made up the entry list for this fourth scramble over 72 holes in the Augusta national tournament and $5,000 in cash to the salaried players.

For the first time since Jones reentered copetition for this all-star battle inaugurated by the retired champion, the Atlanta lawyer was not a favorite in the betting.

Around the locker rooms a dozen or more players were given a chance to cop the big prize, but the consensus led to lanky Horton Smith of Chicago, two-time winner here over the "ideal" layout designed by the late Dr. Alister MacKenzie.

Smith, one of the greatest putters in the game, was stroking his practice shots in great style and the boys say it will take putting to beat the field, the smallest in the four years of play.

Jones was a sentimental favorite where bets were being laid. Backers figured he might surprise this time and, as in the past, they put up a few dollars on the one-time golfing king. Few believed however, the "grand slam" manufacturer of 1930 could regain the concentration that carried him to the heights.

The ltes tquoted odds listed lighthorse Harry Cooper, of Chicago, in the favored spot at 9 to 1, with Ed Dudley, of Augusta, and Smith second choices at 10 to 1. Jones was rated a 14 to 1 gamble against the field.

Bronzed Gene Sarazen, of Brookfield Center, Conn., winner in 1935 by virtue of his hostoric "double eagle," bit the end of a cigar and between puffs expressed belief 286 to 288 would take the top money of $1,500 if weather conditions remained the same.

In the face of a weather forecast for colder weather, the sun shone brightly today to give a semblance of hope for perfect playing conditions. A stiff breeze continued out of the northwest and the outlook was for rising temperatures for the start at noon, Eastern standard time, tomorrow.

Smith battled cold in 1934 to win the initial tournament with a 72-hole total of 284 and stroked through a rainstorm last year to overtake Cooper in a great rally, and triumph with 285. Sarazen tied Craig Wood in 1935 at 282 and won the play-off.

Sarazen figured he had named the winner in selecting five players from the field. He listed Henry Picard, of Hershey, Pa.; Smith, who recently won the North and South open; Cooper, Sam Snead, of White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., the rookie sensation of 1936, and Ralph Guldahl, of St. Louis.

Guldahl, Snead, Paul Runyan, of White Plains, N. Y., and Byron Nelson, of Ridgewood, N. J., were quoted at odds of 14 to 1 along with Jones. Dennis Shute, the P. G. A. champion, and Jimmy Thomson, of Chicago, were listed at 16 to 1.

Griffith Seeking To Obtain Vosmik

the player is declared a free agent. Manager Bucky Harris, on the strength of Henrich's recommendations, has been touting Griffith on the player's talents.

"From what I hear from managers in that league, Henrich can't miss in the majors," Harris declared the other day in discussing the fellow's case. "They tell me Henrich is a far better prospect than Roy Weatherly, who was supposed to be Cleveland's prize package of last season."

For several seasons both Griffith and Harris have admired the play of Vosmik when that outfielder was with the Cleveland club, but the Indians were unwilling to consider a trade for Vosmik. With Vosmik now the property of the Browns, with whom the Nats are on cordial trading terms, the Nats' bosses are fired by the possibility of acquiring him.

Despite Vosmik's slump at bat last season when he batted only .287, Griffith and Harris have confidence in his hitting ability and picture a rousing outfield for Washington if Vosmik can be obtained to flank Ben Chapman on one side with Johnny Stone on the other.

Bell, a long-distance hitter, but comparatively slow in the field, also would be welcomed by the Nats, but Griffith's chief negotiations with the Browns at this time are directed toward the acquisition of Vosmik.

With no trading material, of consequence at his command, the Nats' owner is attempting to buy an outfielder for cash. He would be willing to include Sington in any deal, however.

That a deal of some kind is brewing is apparent from the actions of Griffith and Harris, who are frequently seen in long conferences here and are often called to the long distance telephone.

The sensational showing of the Nats in the Grapefruit League games in which they have a record of nine wins against 2 defeats has captured the imagination of Griffith, whose habit it has been to buy talent only when he considers his team is a pennant possibility. Thus it was that he paid $30,000 for Earl McNeely during the 1924 season in a well-regarded attempt to bring pennant talent to the club.

Miss Hemphill Upset In North-South Golf

By the Associated Press.

Pinehurst, N. C., March 31.—A sensational upset victory by Virginia Guilfoil, 19-year-old Syracuse, N. Y., collegian, over Kathryn Hemphill, the defeat of Deborah Verry, defending champion, by Jean Bauer, of Providence, R. I., and the advance of two seasoned players over less-favored opponents told the story of today's second-round play in the annual North and South golf tourney for women.

In the semifinals tomorrow the blonde Miss Guilfoil will meet Miss Bauer, and Mrs. Glenna Collett Vare, of Philadelphia, will match strokes with Mrs. Estelle Lawson Page, of Chapel Hill, N. C.

Miss Hemphill, a pre-tourney favorite from Columbia, S. C., who won three titles in the Florida meets, lost, 2 and 1, after the Syracuse dark horse had shown the quality of her game by playing 14 consecutive holes, beginning with the fourth, in 53 strokes.

By trimming Miss Verry, Worcester, Mass., skiing and golfing devotee, one up, Miss Bauer achieved revenge for her defeat in the finals of the same event last year. A drive into the rough from the eighteenth tee cost Miss Verry a half, which would have sent the match to the nineteenth hole, on which she won it in 1936.

Mrs. Vare displayed the same steady game that in the past have given her the national championship six times and the North and South title several times in defeating Mrs. William Hockenjos, of West Orange, N. J., 6 and 5. Mrs. Hockenjos, holder of the New Jersey title, was erratic today, and provided little opposition for her opponent, the medalist in this tourney.

Mary Kuhn, of Aspinwall, Pa., who contributed to the event's record of upsets yesterday by defeating Jane Cothran, of South Carolina, likewise was never a serious threat to Mrs. Page, holder of the course record of 72 for the Pinehurst No. 3 course, where the tourney is being played. The score was 3 and 1.

Farrington Victor In Badminton Play

Max Farrington, graduate manager of athletics at George Washington University, gained the semifinal round of the annual city badminton tournament last night by winning two matches. Later, paired with Waldron Faulkner, he was eliminated from further competition in doubles by the team of John Purinton and Harry Howlett, after one of the best matches of the card.

Farrington's first victim was Carins, who bowed, 15-4 and 15-5. His second was Rowe, who waged a more determined struggle before losing, 15-12, 15-4. Complete results:

Men's Singles.

Farrington defeated Cairns 15—4, 15—5; Fleury defeated Feldman, by default; Farrington defeated Rowe, 15—12, 15—4; Baker defeated Fleury, 15—11, 15—8.

Koverly Mat Foe of Baxter Here Tonight

American Legion to Get Part of Receipts From Brawl at Arena.

Laverne Baxter, the bad boy of the mat, and George Koverly, the wild man, will meet tonight in the feature match on Joe Turner's wrestling card at the arena.

April Fool Day or no April fool, both Baxter and Koverly have promised to spring something new, even if Baxter has to hide a little gadget in his snaggled-toothed mouth.

Baxter insists he will tear Koverly apart, and see whether he is man or beast.

Both are terrific villains, only Baxter practices most of his villany inside the squared circle, while Koverly continues his offensive, even to the extent of punching away at bluecoats and spectators. For this reason the former prize fighter was banned for five months from the local mats by Impresario Joseph Turner.

Koverly was in town a few weeks ago, slammed Mike Sterlich and threatened to slam a couple of booing ringsiders.

Baxter almost broke Jack Hader's neck in one match, and in the other outtalked and outpunched Referee Bennah Bortnick to win another verdict from Hader. He has torn shirts from Bortnick's back, tossed him out of the ring, staged unsuccessful one-man sit-down strike and tied Wee Willie Davis' shoes in last week's feature, forcing Promoter Turner to enter the ring and intervene for the first time in five years.

Tufts Tennis Team Beats Colonials, 6-2

Held to two victories in singles engagements by Tuft's clever racqueters, George Washington's tennis teeam lost its opening match of the season to the Jumbos, 6—2, yesterday on the Columbia Country Club court.

Ed Surine and Jack Butterworth accounted for the Colonials' lone points, defeating Fairfield and Baylies, respectively. Surine won only after a torrid struggle that saw all three sets deuced. The scores were, 5—7, 10—8 and 7—5. Butterworth won in comparitively easy fashion, 6—1 7—5.

Yanks Beat Cards, 5 to 4; Tigers Win

Reds Score 10 Runs in Last Inning to Down Bees, 11 to 10.

St. Petersburg, Fla., March 31 (AP).—Bill Dickey's double to left gave the New York Yankees a 5-to-4 victory over the St. Louis Cardinals today, in the ninth inning. The Cards led, 4-3, as the Rupper Rifles entered their half of the ninth but singles by Rolfe and Joe DiMaggio plus a walk to Lou Gehrig set the stage for Dickey's drive.

Lefty Gomez and Dizzy Dean started the game on the mound. Gomez made an impressive showing, giving the Cards two hits in five innings and fanning three. Dean allowed one hit in his two innings on the mound and retired in favor of Bob Weiland.

Four players were lopped from the roster. The players were Pitchers Vito Tamulis and Jim Tobin, Catcher Bill Baker and Outfielder Ernie Koy. All were sent to the Newark Bears, Yankee farm team, on option. Manager Joe McCarthy said he would keep all other players until the season opens.

Tigers Beat Bosox, 12 to 2.

Sarasota, Fla.—The Detroit Tigers came to life today and walloped the Boston Red Sox, 12 to 2, in an exhibition game.

Detroit pounded Jack Wilson and Johnny Marcum for 16 hits and 23 bases, Gerald Walker leading the assault with two doubles and two singles.

Tampa, Fla.—In the wildest game of the Grapefruit League season to date, the Cincinnati Reds came to bat in the seventh inning with the score 10 to 1 against them, and rallied to defeat the Boston Bees, 11 to 10.

Cincinnati pitchers walked 17. Boston hurlers were similarly wild, issuing six passes, five of them from Lou Fette, star among American Association hurlers last year.

Winterhaven, Fla.—The Philadelphia Phillies won a Citrus Belt pitching classic from the Brooklyn Dodgers today, 1 to 0. Bucky Walters and Rookie Wayne Lamaster combined to shut out the Dodgers with seven hits, and another rookie, Gene Corbett, singled home the winning run in the last of the ninth.

Gulfport, Miss.—The business of pruning the New York Giants' hurling corps will go forward in the next two days as the Giants prepare to leave after their game with the Jersey City team tomorrow.

Laredo, Tex.—A home run with the bases filled by Catcher Harshany in the eighth inning enabled the San Antonio Club of the Texas League to defeat the Philadelphia Athletics in their slugging exhibition game today, 13 to 12.

New Orleans, La.—For the third time in their last three games, the Cleveland Indians staged a ninth-inning rally today and defeated the Milwaukee Brewers of the American Association, 11 to 4, in the opener of a two-game series.

Seguin, Tex.—Pitchers Milstead and Ramon, of Tulsa, of the Texas League, held the St. Louis Browns to four hits today as Tulsa won an exhibition game, 5 to 0.

Los Angeles, Calif.—Touching off a four-run blast in the twelfth inning yesterday the Pittsburgh Pirates won a county fair hitting contest from the Chicago White Sox, 16 to 12.

The Pirates made 20 hits, including home runs by John Dickshot, Fred Schulte and Al Todd, off Ted Lyons, Sugar Cain, Monty Stratton and Italo Chelini. The Sox hitting amounted to 19 safeties off Mace Brown, Waite Hoyt and Russ Bauers, with Mike Kreevich and Jack Hayes connecting for homers.

Duke Beats Spartans, 12-7.

Durham, N. C., March 31 (AP).—Playing sensational defensive ball that included five double plays, Duke University handed the touring Michigan State Spartans their first loss of the season this afternoon 12-7.

Detroit, March 31 (U.P.).—Big Bill Tilden was defeated tonight by Fred Perry in the fifth match of their professional tennis tour. The score was 6-4, 6-4, 6-4. Tilden has won only one match of the series.

This Morning

Orlando, Fla.

By this time it ought to be quite clear that the Cleveland ball club's troubles with Lord High Commissioner Landis are more than a coincidence. Done with the Feller case which threatened an open revolt by the club owners against Landis' authority, the Cleveland club now finds itself embroiled in the Tommy Henrich dispute.

Henrich is the young, sensational outfielder of the Milwaukee team who wrote Judge Landis that he believed the Cleveland club was "covering him up" and hindering his advancement into the major leagues. He has been sent to successive Cleveland farms at Zanesville, New Orleans and now Milwaukee, and his squak is that Cleveland is keeping him out of a major-league salary until such times as they need an outfielder.

POVICH.

There is a rule in the major-league by-laws protecting young ball players in such cases, and, in Henrich's particular case, it is apparent that he had a right to expect that he would be graduated into the American League this year. He was acclaimed the greatest outfielder in his league and several clubs were known to be seeking his services.

* * * *

Cleveland owners are in Dutch again with Landis, who is now considering all phases of L'Affaire Henrich, and, if he deems the Indians have sought to "cover up" the young star and restrain his natural advancement in baseball, he will follow precedent and declare Henrich a free agent.

* * * *

But what I started to say was that the conviction is growing that Cleveland's troubles with Landis must be inspired by somebody and that somebody, according to well-informed baseball men is Billy Evans, the reformed umpire, who is now general manager of the Red Sox farm system.

* * * *

It was Evans who, in a magazine article, made note of Cleveland's move in keeping Henrich in the minor leagues after ostensibly selling him to Milwaukee for $7,500. The price, Evans pointed out, was a ridiculous sum for a ball player of Henrich's talents and who, according to Evans, was worth at least $15,000 to a big-league club at the current market.

* * * *

It was after reading Evans' article that Henrich squawked and it was after Henrich squawked that Owner Alva Bradley heatedly declared he would charge Evans before Commissioner Landis with a "breach of ethics."

* * * *

And what is Evans' particular interest in Cleveland's dealings with its ball players? Why, nothing, except that there is no love lost between Evans and the Cleveland club as a result of events leading to Evans' dismissal as general manager at Cleveland two years ago.

Severing relations with Cleveland and taking a scouting job with the Red Sox, Evans was thoroughly acquainted with the setup of the Cleveland player system and in a position to know on what points their ownership of players could be challenged.

Suspicion was directed toward Evans in the Feller case, too. The Red Sox scout knew of the loose manner in which the young pitching star had been handled by the Indians and that there was a possibility that Feller would be declared a free agent by Landis. The Red Sox were supposed to bid as high as $100,000 for Feller if it became a bidding proposition and it would be a nice feather in Evans' cap if they landed Feller on the strength of his information.

So it would appear that Bradley's declaration that he will charge Evans with a "breach of ethics" in this case is no idle threat. He has his own suspicions and he's sore at Evans. And Landis, if he is of the mind to do it, can set Mr. Evans down. Anyway, if Evans is called on the carpet, there must be a deal of tall explaining.

Outfielder Buster Mills, of the Red Sox, who came up from Rochester, where he was judged the best prospect in the International League last fall, was a hero in the East-West all-star football game at San Francisco in 1930.

Fresh out of the University of Oklahoma, he kicked the winning field goal, the only score of the game, but back home in Ranger, Tex., the joy in the Mills household was short-lived.

Because Papa Mills, listening on the radio, and learning that Buster had won the game, leaped up, kicked over a vase in his excitement, and fractured a foot.

Navy Drops 5-to-4 Debut To Vermont

Middies Outhit Foes, But Errors Cost Them Victory.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., March 31.—The Naval Academy opened its baseball season here today by losing a tight game, 5 to 4, to the University of Vermont, outhitting the visitors, but falling down in their fielding game. The Middies led by 4 to 2 at the start of the seventh session, but single runs by the visitors in each of the last three innings, turned the tide in their favor, the game ending in semi-darkness.

Vermont broke the ice in the fourth inning, when it scored a brace of runs. In the fourth Ingram hit safely, stole second and came home on Bedell's wild pitch. In the fifth O'Herron and Pace singled, were sacrificed ahead by Eliot and scored on Thompson's slashing single to left. In the sixth, Cooke hit for the circuit, giving the Navy a two-run lead.

In the seventh, Vermont scored a run when Wollinsky's triple drove Halligan across the plate. In the eighth it tied the score when Berry was hit by Eliot and took third on the latter's overthrow of second, and scored on Levine's sacrifice. Pat Bedell, pitcher, singled in the ninth and scored on successive errors by Pace and Cooke.

Jerome Bruckel, Navy's recruit from the Plebes' nine of last year, made a fine start on the slab. He did not allow a hit or run in the first three innings, but was hit twice in the fourth, passed a batsman and hit another. In the same inning, he was hit in the face by a thrown ball and retired in favor of Joe Eliot, regular of last year.

46 Ringmen Seek College Titles Today

Boxers From 16 Schools in California Meet; 2 Terps Entered.

By the Associated Press.

Sacramento, Calif., March 31.—Chin-wallopers from 16 colleges pair off here tomorrow night in the opening bouts of a three-day tournament to determine the national intercollegiate boxing championships.

Most of them champions in their own sections, 46 boxers will fight it out for titles in eight divisions, from 115 pounds up to the heavyweight class.

A group of sterling performers from the old South is headed by Ray Matulewicz of Duke University, 175-pound N. C. A. A. titleholder and 1936 Olympic team member. He never fought in the Olympics because someone neglected to enter his name.

Matulewicz, who had to eat himself into the light-heavyweight class last year, drops back to the 165-pound ranks—his natural weight—for the N. C. A. A. On the basis of his 1936 showing he squares off as the logical favorite at 165.

His chief opposition is expected from Max Novich, of North Carolina, Southern Conference champion this year and last; Mortimer Caplin, of Virginia, Southern Conference semifinalist in 1936, and Leon Gray, of Arizona, Border Conference champion.

Semifinals will be Friday and finals Saturday.

Benny Alperstein and Tony Birmingham, Maryland's entries in the 135 and 125-pound classes respectively as in the two toughest divisions of the national meet. Alperstein and Karl Drexel, of San Jose State, are the only two boxers in the clas swho have lost this year. The other four are conference or golden gloves champions. Bob Bates, Washington State lightweight, won the title in the 145-pound clas sin the far western conference and even Drexel is a San Francisco golden gloves winner.

Benny is a tough spot and appreciates that fact. He is in excellent shape and fairly exudes confidence.

Jockey Sarno Unhurt in 2d Tropical Spill

Amqui Wins Sprint Test as Favorite; Steffen Is Also Unseated.

By the Associated Press.

Tropical Park, Fla., March 31.—Patrons of the Gables Racing Association received their third scare in as many days just after the first race on today's program, but fortunately, no injuries resulted. Little Mike Sarno, New York apprentice lad, who took a spill the previous day, was thrown from Buckley's Pride after passing the finish line and while trying to pull up. The boy again escaped with a shaking up and bruises.

The race was won by the $4.40 favorite, Amqui, which ran down the pacemaking Chance Queen in the stretch and drew off to register by three lengths over the slow-start-of the place.

A hair-raising blanket finish marked the running of the second division of the 4-furlong event for maiden 2-year-old fillies. Six of the eight starters drove to the wire in a bunch. Dohoev, a 5-to-1 shot, earned the purse by a head. The photo showed Gracky, Heraldic and Shred next in order. My Pauline, the favorite, and Jacqueline were close behind. Dohoev and Gracky both closed with remarkable speed in the stretch to prevail over the faster beginners. Shred, after having to be led to the post, outfooted the field until the closing strides.

Creeping up a little closer on Hubert Le Blanc and scoring a triple for the second day in a row, Wayne Wright brought the $5.90 favorite, first entry, first home by four lengths in the seventh race of a mile and a sixteenth. It was the Idaho jockey's twentieth success and pulled him up to within three of Le Blanc. First Entry raced as if he outclassed his rivals, leading all the way without being extended. Over Yonder, coupled with Motley, lasted to save the place by a half-length from Thumbs Down.

Day Dawn won the second race for her second in a row. It also gave the talent two straight, for the filly was a $5 favorite. Twosome, another recent winner, trailed the victorious filly by two lengths while beating Hornet a half-length for second money. Day Dawn overtook the speedy Loyal Son after a quarter-mile duel, shook off Romney Royal's challenge around the bend, then held Twosome at bay in the stretch to score easily.

38 Jumpers Drill for Hunt Race Events

By M. Grace Brooks.

A Staff Correspondent.

Middleburg, Va., March 31.—Thirty-eight brush and timber horses are in training in the Middleburg section for the spring race meets, beginning Saturday at Curles Neck. Jack Skinner, one of the best amateur riders and trainers in America, has the largest number under his supervision. Those in the Skinner stables include seven steeplechasers belonging to Paul Mellon-Chatterplay, Welbourne Jake, Catalano, Corn Dodger, Dothair, Dangay, Bad Boy (Mrs. Mellon's) and others; one belonging to Raymond Guest, one to Duncan Read; one to Frederick Warburg; one to Mrs. T. B. Davis; one to Tod Sloane; one to W. C. Seipp, and one of his own.

Other trainers in this section are Arthur White, with 12 in his stable; Turner Wiltshire, 2; L. C. Leith, 5, and Melville H. Bearns, jr., 5.

Skinner has entered three of his number in the races at Curles Neck Farm on Saturday. These are Welbourn Jake, entered in the Deep Run Hunt Cup timber race, and Mother Sills, owned by Mrs. T. B. Davis, and an entry of Raymond Guest in the brush races.

Skinner is pointing two of Paul Mellon's best steeplechasers to the Maryland Hunt Cup. These are Welbourne Jake and Chatterplay. Welbourne Jake, formerly racing in the colors of Mrs. Randolph Scott, the former Marion du Pont Sommerville, has won several important timber events, among them the Chilton, a 3-mile race over the Glenwood course at Middleburg.

Two Champs Upset In Billiards Play

New York, March 31 (AP).—A session that produced two major upsets found Defending Champion Jimmy Caras, of Wilmington, Del., and former Titleholder Erwin Rudolph, of Cleveland, toppled from the ranks of the undefeated in the world's pocket billiard championships today.

Caras was downed, 125 to 88, by Marcel Camp, of Detroit, who only last night lost the tournament's most lopsided decision to Ralph Greenleaf, of Chicago. Rudolph was upset by a tournament newcomer, Fay Gainer, of Vineland, N. J., 125 to 82, in 30 innings.

Copper and Oil Stocks Favored in More Active Trading; U. S. Bonds Again Decline.

New York, March 31.—Stock trading was more active today than at any time in a week and many issues advanced a point or two, but most of the gains were established early and subsequent developments did not suggest that a trend had been re-established. Government bonds were weak. Wheat declined over 2 cents a bushel and cotton was easier.

Copper and oil stocks took the lead away from the steels right at the opening and did not relinquish it in the later trading. The high prices attained by United States Steel, Bethlehem and Republic in the late upturn yesterday brought no little profit taking into the market and kept that group depressed.

The definite and tangible reason for the popularity of coppers was the rise in the metal price to 17 cents, another milestone in a prolonged and sensational advance, the like of which has not been seen in years. Anaconda, American Smelting, Kennecott, Cerro de Pasco, U. S. Smelting and Phelps Dodge advanced sharply in the early trading to prices which, like in the steels, were a temptation to take profits, but the market attracted enough buying to sustain the coppers at their early high level fairly well.

Seaboard, Texas and Standard of New Jersey and Indiana were the best liked among the oils. Rails fluctuated within a narrow range of their previous closings. Motors were for the most part slightly lower. Rubber, tobacco and merchandising shares were irregular. In the final hour an upturn in amusement stocks added some life to the market and helped bring the volume of trading well above yesterday's.

Homestake.

Homestake Mining broke 18 points, getting close to the level from which it started a sensational advance of 37 points last Saturday.

Recently, when there have been good enough reasons for an advance in stocks on their own account, disturbances in the market for Government bonds have not been a deterrent. Except for the oils and coppers, which had their own incentives, traders appeared unwilling today to extend themselves far while Treasury obligations were being shaken through their old lows. Specialists saw further illustrations of how thin the Treasury market is. It can take a few bonds or notes without being disturbed, but substantial blocks call for different kinds of quotations.

The impression that the United States has become an importing nation, thanks largely to forces put in motion by Administration policies, is strengthened by the foreign trade report for February. While exports increased 27 per cent the other side of the ledger spoiled the picture, for it revealed a 44 per cent rise in the merchandise imports. In the first two months of this year merchandise imports exceeded exports by $64,000,000, yet the country took in $241,662,000 gold and exported $11,000. In the corresponding period of last year, when exports and imports were striking an approximate even balance, the country imported $29,000,000 gold.

This seeming incongruity of an increasing merchandise import balance and a heavy influx of gold is a backhand compliment to the United States as a safe haven for foreign funds, which casts some doubt about the effectiveness of proposals for discouraging foreign participation in our security markets.

Financing Reduced.

The complete figures for financing in March, now at hand, illustrate how greatly the machinery for security distribution has been slowed down by the weakness of bond prices and the existence of a buyers' strike. Financing this month was the smallest in eighteen months, and more than half the total was accounted for by the $130,000,000 Philadelphia Electric issue. That major offering was expected to break the "log jam," and it did so in a way, but only after the syndicate had been dissolved and the bonds allowed to seek their proper level. A real test of the market is in the making, but how large the issue will be is not yet determined. The Federal land banks have an issue of $106,000,000 4½s that will become redeemable for the first time on May 1 and another of $87,000,000 that can be called for November 1. The expected financing will probably take in only the 4¼s and may not be as large as the retiring issue, for it is well known that payments on mortgage principal have been good in recent months.

Midamerica.

The disposition of the Midamerica control will be an interesting topic until it is consummated, as eventually it must be. The Ball interests did not go into the situation because they liked the railroad business or wanted to learn something about it. Their purchase of Midamerica was generally conceded to be a friendly act and now, if there is any official inspiration in the reports going about, the "for sale" sign has been hoisted. In view of the strong feeling in certain Washington circles that Alleghany should be broken up, observers find it difficult to picture the kind of investor who would buy Midamerica as a going concern. An investment trust might take it as a speculation on some value remaining after liquidation.

Coronation Demand.

A new kind of demand for sterling began to be felt in the foreign exchange market—the "coronation demand" from tourists who expect to visit England for that event in May. With the general level of income higher the outlook for foreign travel is considered better than it was last year. Shipping companies and tourist agencies are counting upon trips abroad by a number of persons who have planned such journeys for several years but who have not had the money or the leisure. The French franc is benefitting from travel demands as well as sterling for the reason that many visitors who go to England for the coronation will also visit France. Paris has a world's fair, too, this year and it opens in May.

Board Room Sweepings.

Talk is heard of an increase in the price of sulphur. Should one be made it would be the first in several years. . . . Wall Street heard today that Air Reduction would show earnings of 75 cents a share for the first quarter of this year. . . . American Rolling Mill, it is said, has suffered no cancellations of orders as a result of the automobile strike. . . . Rumor has it that the Allied Chemical Co. is considering a merger with Virginia-Carolina Chemical.

35½-Point Drop.

Fairbanks Morse preferred appeared on the tape today for the first time since February 24, selling at 150 compared with 185½ on the earlier date. In the meantime, on February 28, the conversion basis was changed from 3 to 2½ shares of common.

Grain Values Drop From New High Records

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, March 31.—Wheat and corn values both tumbled late today after skyrocketing to fresh top record prices unequaled in some cases since 1925. The late reaction, which as a rule more than wiped out gains, was led by the Buenos Aires market, where wheat fell about 7 cents from earlier high levels.

At the close, wheat was at the day's bottom level, 1¼ to 2½ cents under yesterday's finish, May, $1.42½ to $1.42¾; July $1.27¼ to $1.27½; September $1.24⅜ to $1.24½; corn, varying from ½-cent lower to an advance of 2¼ cents; May, $1.21½ to $1.21⅝; July, $1.15¼ to $1.15⅜; September, $1.09¼ to $1.09⅜; oats unchanged to ½-cent off; May, 49⅜ to 49½, and rye, 1⅝ down to ¾ up; May, $1.16. Provisions closed unchanged to 10 cents lower.

New York, March 31.—With net earnings reaching the highest level in 10 years, Shell Union Oil Corporation and subsidiaries report for 1936 combined net income, after all charges and taxes, of $22,494,364, including net income from operations of $19,654,460 and net profit of $2,839,503 on the sale of an investment. This compares with net profit of $6,812,835 reported for 1935. Total operating earnings for 1936, after eliminating inter-company sales, were $231,698,033, compared with $202,169,217 in the preceding year.

Net income, as shown for 1936, is after deductions for depletion, depreciation, intangible development expenditures, amortization, interest income taxes and minority interest in earnings. Included in these deductions is $9,449,836 representing 100 per cent amortization of intangible development expenditures, since the company still adheres to this practice. The report states that no provision for surtaxes on undistributed earnings was considered necessary.

After the regular preferred stock dividend requirement for the year, the combined net income was equivalent to $1.57 per share on 13,070,625 shares of common stock outstanding. This compared with earnings of 37 cents per share on the same number of shares for 1936.

Hibbs & Co. Admit Three as New Partners

organized 50 years ago with offices at 1419 F street northwest. In 1907 it helped establish Washington's financial district on Fifteenth street northwest, when its office building, which has come to be a familiar landmark, was erected on that street between New York avenue and H. The firm is a member of the New York Stock, New York Curb, Boston, Washington and Philadelphia Stock Exchanges, the Chicago Board of Trade and the New York Cotton Exchange. It is one of the few large stock exchange houses in the country serving a local community exclusively in that it has no out-of-town branches.

These additions to the list of partners bring the total to five, and continue a tradition of promotion begun with the firm's present senior member, W. W. Spaid, who became a partner in 1912, after long service as an employe.

Mr. Spaid, who was formerly president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association, was admitted to the local bar in 1907. He is a member of the New York Stock and Curb Exchanges, Chicago Board of Trade, New York Cotton Exchange, Washington Stock Exchange and other out-of-town exchanges. For several years he has served as president of the Associated Stock Exchanges, an organization made up of exchanges throughout the country. In addition, he has been for many years vice president of the Association of New York Stock Exchange firms.

J. Thilman Hendrick, other member of the firm, became a partner in 1928. He is also chairman of the board of Lanston Monotype Machine Co. of Philadelphia, and has been a member of the Washington Stock Exchange for more than 30 years. Born in Tennessee, Mr. Hendrick has made his home in Washington since he was a young man and became president of the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia during the second administration of Woodrow Wilson.

Three New Partners Join Chas. D. Barney Co.

New York, March 31.—Philip W. Brown, Ogden Phipps and William Fenton Johnston will be admitted tomorrow as general partners of Charles D. Barney & Co., New York Stock Exchange members. Mr. Brown, head of the trading department, joined the firm in 1920. Mr. Phipps in 1932 and Mr. Johnston, head of the syndicate department, in 1935. C. Redington Barrett, general partner, and Alan L. Corey, limited partner, have retired from the firm as of March 31.
